Lobbyist concerned about energy bill

By Casey McCormick
 A former Bird City resident recently had the unique experience of lobbying in Washington, D.C. With concerns about President Bush's controversial energy bill, Ryan Busse, now of Kalispell, Mont., traveled with several other hunters and fishermen to lobby for Trout Unlimited which stands against the bill.

Busse

"I would say it's been very interesting," said Mr. Busse of the experience. He and five other sportsmen visited the offices of the two Montana state senators and received very different receptions.
 "We met a very cold shoulder at Senator Burns' office," said Mr. Busse. "It certainly was a warmer reception at Max Baucus', I think he's committed to the Rocky Mountain Front."
 Mr. Busse is an avid outdoors man and is vice president of sales for Kimber Manufacturing, one of the nation's leading gun manufacturers. Spending much of his time hunting along the Rocky Mountain front range, Mr. Busse cares about its preservation. He is also a self-proclaimed "conservative" Republican. But he agrees with Trout Unlimited's concerns about the president's bill.

tions of the Clean Water Act, would diminish public participation in decisions involving public lands, would weaken regulations that protect fish and wildlife, would place oil and gas extraction above all other considerations and would pave the way for pipelines and other infrastructure to sprawl across wilderness and national parks," according to the Trout Unlimited report.
 Although Mr. Busse will always be a "lifelong Republican" he does not care for a bill which would exempt oil and gas companies from Clean Water Act standards and damage the fragile balance of the environment. "Anybody who wants to take that away and loosen the protections of such a pristine country is an enemy of me and every hunter and fisherman I know."
 While in Washington the group first went to Senator Burns' office. David Stalling, a hunter who works with Trout Unlimited and helped to coordinate the mission, described their visit.
 "We met with Senator Burns' aide (and) it didn't go well," said Mr. Stalling. "We came away from the meeting feeling that Senator Burns was simply not interested at all in hearing our concerns."
 The Republican senator supports the bill and later issued a statement after the meeting defending the energy bill.
 The lobbyists next stop was more positive. At Senator Baucus' office they spoke with another aide.
 "We had a good meeting with Senator Baucus' aide," said Mr. Stalling. "It was good but it was also frustrating."
 The aide would not state the senator's stance on the energy bill but indicated that he could be supporting it.
 "If he's leaning toward supporting it, then he needs to hear from sportsmen at home," said Mr. Stalling.

Annual competition to be held Saturday

By Karen Krien
 The second Kansas State Pheasant Competition will be held Saturday and Sunday at Ringneck Country located south of St. Francis.
 Rex Murray, owner of Ringneck and coordinator of the event, reported that the roster filled up weeks ago and 130 teams of two men and a dog will be hunting pheasants.
 They will come from Wyoming, Nebraska, Missouri, Texas, Oklahoma, Colorado, New Mexico and Kansas. Last year's champions from Evergreen and Larkspur, Colo., will also be competing at this year's event.
 Pheasants are "planted" and the teams and dogs are given a time limit to either flush out the pheasant or to point out the pheasants. Mr. Murray says that some of the best dogs will be working during the two-day event.
 "If anyone is looking for a good hunting dog, they will have an opportunity to see all hunters at work on Saturday and Sunday," he said.
 There will be two divisions: pointing, where the dog must hold the bird for 3 seconds; and flushing where the dog must flush out the bird.

viewing parking is available and there is no admission. People can also bring their lawn chairs but binoculars are recommended.
 Each year the Murrays have five similar hunting competitions so they know what it takes to host such an event. They also have a controlled shooting area where hunters come seven months of the year to hunt pheasants, quail and chucks. Hunters come from all over the United States to enjoy the sport.
 Mr. Murray expects the competition to bring in over 250 people this weekend. He and his wife Sandy have a few bunk houses for some of the hunters and there are places for fifth wheels and campers. However, there will be a number of the hunters who will be staying in St. Francis and Goodland motels, eating meals and buying gas.
 Mr. Murray thinks pheasant hunting competition is a good thing for the communities as well as putting St. Francis on the map.
 "We have had many favorable comments on our other competitions," Mr. Murray said. "We go out of our way to make the competitions fair, using the same judges and bird setters, so everyone has the same chance for winning."
 "It should be an interesting competition and people can come and go or they can come for the day, eat lunch and just enjoy watching and talking to the hunters — it will be a great two days of entertainment."
 For more information, contact the Murrays at 1-785-899-5882.
