

Hospice training available for interested volunteers

Hospice is about living life as fully as possible

Cheyenne County needs volunteers to train as a hospice volunteer.

There is a hospice volunteer training set for Saturday and Sunday. Times are 8:30 a.m. to 5 p.m. on Saturday and 1 to 5 p.m. on Sunday.

Volunteers can assist with tasks such as housekeeping or shopping, providing transportation, holding a hand, or just being a friend and listening.

These tasks, said Edie Walters, county volunteer coordinator, may seem simple, but they makes a real difference.

Hospice compassionately cares for people who are near the close of life — but hospice isn't about how you die, said Donald Schumacher, National Hospice and Palliative Care. It is about how you live!

Hospice and palliative care focuses on how dying people and their loved ones live each day, providing comfort and guidance along the way.

Hospice is widely recognized as the model for quality, compassionate care for people facing a life-limiting illness or injury. Hospice and palliative care involve a team-oriented approach to expert medical care, pain management and emotional and spiritual support expressly tailored to the person's needs and wishes. Support is provided to the person's loved ones as well.

A common misconception people have is that hospice means you're "giving up" or "that there's nothing left for the doctor to do," and that's absolutely wrong. Hospice is not about giving up but is about maximizing the quality of life, no matter how long that might be.

When cure is no longer possible, hospice provides the type of care most people say they want at the end of life — comfort and quality of life. The most common statement made by families who chose hospice for their loved one is, "we wish we had known about hospice sooner."

The Hospice Services is a not-for-profit community-based Medicare certified and Kansas licensed hospice serving 13 counties in northwest and north central Kansas.

Group to help horses

Unwanted horses...the term seems to contradict itself. There are so many people out there that wish they had their own horse.

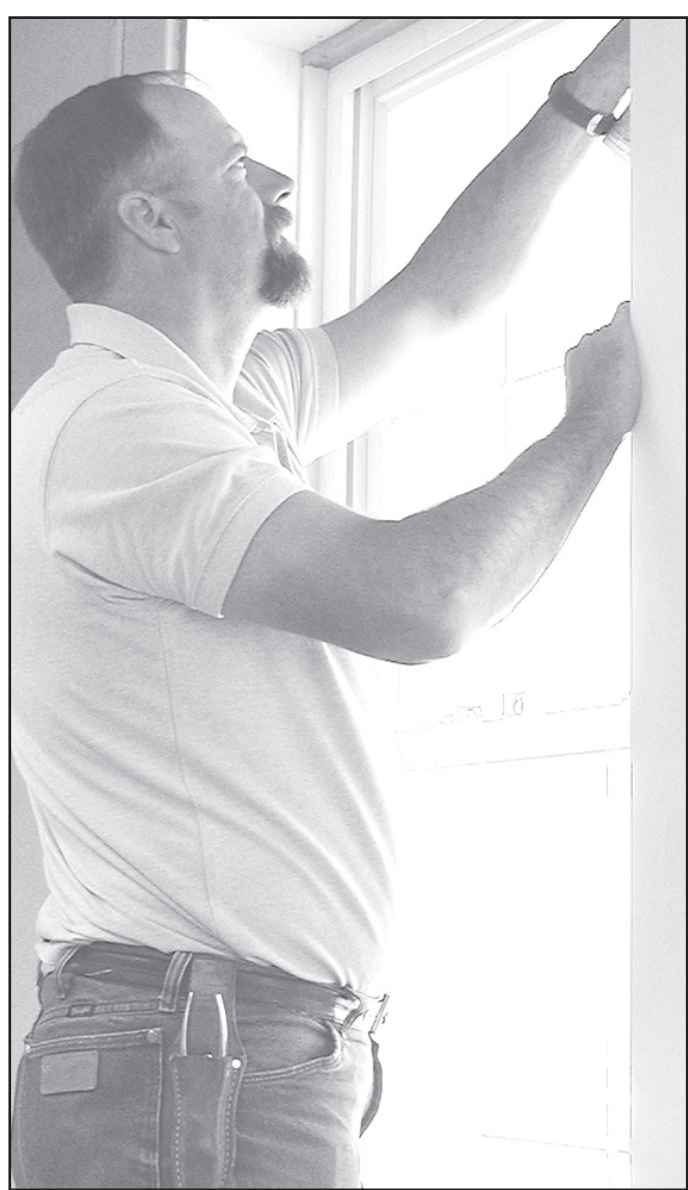

What happens when that person gets the horse and realizes they don't have the means to care for their beloved horse?

Find out the answer to this and many other questions at the 2009 High Plains Horseman's Day from 8:30 a.m. to 4 p.m. on Saturday, April 18 in Oakley at the fairgrounds.

Deb Hodge of the Kansas Horse Council will present the topic of Unwanted Horses on behalf of the Unwanted Horse Coalition. Learn about responsible horse ownership, legislative issues that affect the horse and horse owner, humane treatment, and information on end of life issues for your equine companion.

Special assistance for organic farms

Kansas farmers who are transitioning to organic agriculture or who are currently certified organic, can receive special assistance for meeting their conservation goals under new provisions in the 2008 Farm Bill.

Farmers may apply for financial assistance through the Environmental Quality Incentives Program (EQIP). They can receive up to $20,000 per year or $80,000 over six years. The Department of Agriculture's Natural Resources Conservation Service (NRCS) in Kansas, which administers the program, is setting aside a separate pool of the program's money to help Kansas organic farmers and those that are transitioning to organic production. While Environmental Quality Incentives Program has always been available for organic producers to treat resource concerns on their land, with the provisions of the new Farm Bill, specific funds are being set aside to assist organic producers.

Applications for Environmental Quality Incentives Program are taken continuously throughout the year, however to be considered for Fiscal Year 2009 funding, producers need to have an application signed and returned to their local Natural Resources Conservation Service office by April 10.

Eric Banks, State Conservationist in Kansas, says these applicants will need to include their organic system plan (OSP) when applying for financial assistance to transition to organic agriculture. "Farmers with an organic system plan have typically accomplished much or all of the work needed to develop an Natural Resources Conservation Service conservation plan," he said.

A number of conservation practices may be funded through the program's organic ranking category, including cover crops, crop rotations, fencing and watering for rotational grazing, pest management, and field borders. All conservation practices available under the organic ranking category of the program are also available under the "general" Environmental Quality Incentives Program.

"Dedicating the program's funds to organic transition will hopefully result in more organic crop acres across the state," Mr. Banks said.

Some participants are eligible to receive a higher payment rate; those are limited resource farmers, beginning farmers, and socially disadvantaged groups. For more information go to http://www.nrcs.usda.gov/programs/SLB\_Farmer/.

Visit your local Department of Agriculture's Service Center and talk to the Natural Resource Conservation office staff for more details about this program, conservation planning, and other programs to help you protect your farm. For more information about go to <http://www.ks.nrcs.usda.gov/programs/eqip/> and click on Kansas 2009 EQIP Information.

Funding available for no-till farmers

The Natural Resource Conservation Service is accepting applications for 2009 funding through the Environmental Quality Incentives Program (EQIP) through April 10. Funding is available for practices that have traditionally been funded in the past. There are also new management practice payments and payment rates available in this year's version of the program.

Payments are now available through this program for conversion from a minimum till cropping system (tillage used to prepare a seedbed for one or more crops in rotation) to a full no-till system (no tillage used in any part of the rotation). The 2009 payment rate will be $13/acre each year for three years to implement a no-till system. Since this program is an incentives program, payments are only available to producers who have not already adopted the practice.

Another change is in payments for temporarily suspending irrigation water use. Payments of $150/acre/year for three years are available to eligible producers with irrigated fields in the Quick Response Area (township 5, range 40) in Cheyenne County, while irrigators in the rest of the county can receive $90/acre/year. The fields can still be used for dryland crop production through this program.

For additional information or to make application for program assistance, contact the Natural Resources Conservation Service or Conservation District staff located in the Department of Agriculture Service Center at 614 B W Business US Highway 36 in St. Francis, phone number 785-332-2183 extension 3. Preliminary information is also available on the web at <http://www.ks.nrcs.usda.gov/programs/>.
