Casey's Comments

There are some sure signs that spring is on its way.

Snow is turning to rain. Frozen ground is now mud. The fields of winter wheat are greening up. Also, mornings are milder with the welcome sound of birds chirping for a sunrise.

Another sure sign is the Cheyenne County Wildlife's Fishing Contest, which was held last Sunday. It was a great success with 46 teams showing up at Keller Pond.

Over the years I've been the lucky guy who gets to cover the numerous, wildlife events that make up a part of our local news. What makes these things even more fun to cover is that our last boy at home, Joey, likes this stuff too.

It is such a special part of living in the country that he can simply walk out of our home and nature is right there! Being a city kid, it took a little doing for me to get to the wild. Sure my brothers, friends and I would go camping, but it required a bit of a drive to get away from Denver.

I worry about the future of hunting and the preservation of our natural resources. Will Joey's kids have the same opportunities he has to enjoy the outdoors? Like so many things in life, nothing is guaranteed.

Thanks to the Cheyenne County Wildlife for working for these things. And thanks also to my brother-in-law Doug for teaming up with my boy to go fishing.

If you're interested in supporting and becoming a member of our local wildlife organization, be sure to get a ticket to the annual banquet coming up on March 26.

Letters From Linda

Has love ever failed you? Even if you are currently married, going to be married, or have children, is love perfect in those relationships?

Those questions cause everyone to think and they should, simply because even if you are living like a hermit the greatest desire of humans is to be loved.

Even if you say, "No thanks, been there done that, don't want it or need it," in the hearts of all men and women, we want to be loved as we are and seek it in the most undesirable ways imaginable.

Just think back a moment to one of the most popular cowboy song of the 1980s, "Looking for Love in All the Wrong Places," by Waylon Jennings.

I am going to throw you a curve here; scientists cannot even measure love or pin it down to one definition. Love cannot be described, measured, or explained, it can only be expressed.

Another thing about love, it must have an object. This is really the human definition of love and for me the most frustrating because human love moves around from object to object, like diamond earrings, homes, fame, people etc., and they eventually fail to keep love active.

But there is hope, if you want it. The true love of every human being is personified in Jesus. He never fails and you can love Him, scream at Him, kick His name around in the gutter, and ignore Him, but He is still everywhere.

Just look out your window at a sunrise or a sunset, look into your newborn child's eyes, or while holding your spouse's hand. He is there while you sit with a loved one as the doctor give you some bad news. How do I know this?

Because of His love we celebrate births, sunsets and rainbows. And because of His love we have hope during the difficult times. Let's see if money, careers, or titles can do that! God bless.
