scmccormick@nwkansas.com The Great American Past-time of baseball said "So long" on another individual who added to the game's rich history.

No, I'm not talking about George Steinbrenner. Although the "Boss" did have a huge effect on the New York Yankees and the sport as we know it – he's not the

I'm speaking of Ralph Houk who died last week at the age of Houk spent 20 years in the majors as a manager. He, too, led the Yankees, reaching three American League pennants and two World Series titles in the early

But for all Houk meant to baseball, he was more important to his country.

On a December day in 1944, then Second Lieutenant Houk was in command of 60 soldiers of the 89th Cavalry Reconnaissance Squadron of the 9th Armored Division near Luxembourg, Belgium.

As the Germans orchestrated their Runstedt counteroffensive, better know as the Battle of was backed up into the town of Waldbillig. When 200 enemy soldiers advanced with six Tiger tanks, the Americans held their

After directing the fire against the Tigers, the German advance was thwarted.

This action was described in Houk's Silver Star citation. Later he was awarded a Bronze Star with Oak Leaf Cluster.

This bravery was followed five days later when he was ordered to take orders into the town of Bastogne to the isolated 101st Division. Although the target was heavily surrounded by Germans, Houk led a team with one Jeep Street, St. Francis. Everyone is and two armored cars through enemy lines.

The farm kid from Lawrence, who entered the war in 1941, continued up from first lieutenant to captain to major.

And as a manager for the Yankees, Detroit Tigers and Boston Red Sox, he carried the nickname of "Major." A commander of men the Bulge, Houk's B Troop in war, he was also a leader in baseball.
