Wheat continues on roller coaster

By Jeanne Falk,
K-State Agronomist

It seems that Mother Nature continues to put our wheat through its paces. Temperatures this last week gave the wheat yet another dip on the roller coaster. Across the area, the temperatures dipped below freezing on Wednesday, Thursday, Friday and again on Saturday. This is especially concerning because the wheat had experienced a weekend of good growth with the warm temperatures and was looking somewhat recovered from the leaf damaged from the cold weather on April 9 and 10.

So the big question is 'Do we have any injury from these cold temperatures?' The short answer is 'It depends' and 'We don't know yet'. I know as a producer that is pretty hard to hear. It seems that the answers always are 'It depends'. We also really do not know yet if we have damage to the wheat heads because it normally takes at least a week and a half to see the full damage, if there is any. We are going to look at the regrowth and at the developing head for damage.

There are several things working in the wheat's favor. First, the approximate temperature to cause injury to the wheat is around 26 degrees for two hours. When looking at the weather data for Cheyenne, Sherman, and Wallace Counties, the early morning hours of May 3 had temperatures drop below 26 degrees for two or three hours intervals. All other times, the temperature dipped below freezing, but did not get below 26 degrees. Second, the soil temperature is fairly warm. If the wheat has some decent top growth, it will help keep the warmth close to the soil surface and help 'insulate' it from the cold temperatures. Third, the wheat is behind in its development. Even though the growing point for nearly all the wheat is above the soil surface, it is still fairly low in the stem. Therefore, it is more protected now than if we had normal wheat development.

When you are checking your fields for freeze damage, you should look at the new growth of all stems. This includes the main stem and the tillers. If the tillers are healthy, green, and actively growing, the heads should be fine. If the leaves coming out of the whorl are chlorotic (yellowish to brown), then the head is dead. You can also split open the stem and look at the growing point. This is right below the developing head. It should be a whitish green color. If the spot is brown, then there is damage to the growing point. Remember, the full extent of freeze damage can take a week and a half to two weeks to show up.

If you have any questions about the wheat, please give me a call at the Extension Offices in St. Francis, Goodland, or Sharon Springs. Also, there is a wheat freeze publication available at those Extension offices or on the website at www.sunflower.ksu.edu and click on the agronomy tab. This publication has good color pictures of freeze damage. Additional information can be found on the K-State Sunflower District Agronomy facebook page. Make sure to add us as a friend!

Fair board talks about cover over small show arena

By Karen Krien

Erecting a cover over the show arena on the west side of Jenkins Hall was talked about when the Cheyenne County Fair Board met on Thursday evening.

At the last meeting, Marty Fear, county agent, had the cost of a cloth covering which was around $900 but there would also be the frame work. The board asked that he find the cost for the entire structure.

At the Thursday meeting, he had brought a pamphlet from Majestic Service. The cost for a permanent structure would be $37,000. He thought that it would be better to put that money towards a cover that would last for years rather than one that might last for one year or maybe a couple.

The board appeared to be interested in putting a permanent cover over the arena, noting that it would be a "huge benefit."

At different times during the meeting, the arena cover was discussed again. When they discussed having better beef tie outs, it was suggested that there be an overhang on the roof and beef tied out on the west side of the arena.

Shawna Blanka, representing the 4-H Council, said the council would like to see not only the beef show moved out there but also the goats and lambs.

Again, could the fair board get a loan so the cover would be there this year? Dick Bursch, president, said the commissioners frowned on loans and, grants took time and a lot of paperwork. He said the grandstand was built with a grant, which had to be paid back, from Prairie Land Electric. Drew Flemming, board member, said he would talk to Century II in Bird City to see if there would be any money available for the project.

Mr. Flemming said he thought that, if they were going to put up a permanent structure, it would be best to go with metal tubing and Propanel.

The board asked Agent Fear to draw up a proposal and let the board look at it.
