Travelers tastes tested by unique Asian cuisine

The easy availability of almost any fruit or vegetable at our grocery stores is a joy and a pleasure these days. The five servings recommended by our puzzling new food pyramid are relatively easy to come by for most of us. In other times and in other parts of the world, however, obtaining and eating fresh produce is not so simple. Mama often told me what a special treat an orange was in the Christmas stockings of her childhood, and how they treasured the first spring greens. I once photocopied a photograph of an Almena wedding feast held in the early 1900s. The guests are gleefully holding up peeled bananas, a rare and costly food imported for the occasion. I didn't taste my first pomegranate or persimmon until I was an adult. Still, none of that prepared me for discovering that look a lot like a grapefruit but citrus fruit and apples are not grown in Singapore. No orange or grapefruit juice on the menus, no lime or lemonade. We happened to be in that area around Chinese New Year when oranges are imported for decorations, religious offerings and ceremonies but are seldom eaten by ordinary citizens.

LeRoy and I went into a very upscale grocery and we were amazed to find apples being sold in stretchy foam sockettes to protect them from bruises. They cost $1.95 American per apple and that was 15 years ago! His favorite breakfast treat, grapefruit, was not fruits except pommeloes, which haven't much zing. Another fruit common to the area is durian, which is a strange, lumpy melon that smells like rotting flesh when cut. One sniff was enough for me. We were told in earlier days it was called "Heaven and Hell" fruit because it smelled like one and tasted like the other.

LeRoy tried durian ice cream but I couldn't gag it down. Other local ice cream flavors were red bean curd, sweet corn and plantain. Peculiar but at least edible.

The one citrus treat we ate in Singapore was a salad dressing on butter crunch lettuce. It was delicious and I still make it occasionally. Maybe you'd like to give it a

MY MAMA SAID: Eat fresh fruit and vegetables, especially the peels, to give you pink cheeks and curly hair. My sister and I believed her through many years of freckon the racks, nor were any citrus les and straight hair. By the time we figured out it was a trick we'd learned to like fruit and vegetables.

SINGAPORE CITRUS DRESSING

Two cups extra virgin olive oil One cup red wine vinegar One teaspoon dry mustard Three tablespoons brown sugar Two teaspoons curry powder One orange, seeded but not peeled

One lemon, seeded but not peeled One tart apple, cored but not peeled One small red onion, peeled and root end removed Tabasco and Worcestershire sauces Sea salt and coarsely ground black peppercorns

Dissolve brown sugar, mustard and curry powder in vinegar and simmer for five minutes. Cool and stir in oil. Process orange, lemon, apple and onion in a food processor or grinder until quite fine. Add cooled vinegar and oil mixture. Season to your taste with Tabasco, and Worcestershire sauces, salt and coarsely cracked black pepper. Store in refrigerator and always shake well before using. Good on any kind of greens or fruit salads and can be used as a marinade for porkchops, chicken and white fish.

This temporary holiday treat was also served in Bangkok at the Black Orchid Hotel and at a Rotary luncheon in a Hong Kong restaurant. Whether you celebrate Chinese New Year or not, try it for a different twist on salad. And don't forget how blessed you are to be able to buy the ingredients without a bit of trouble any time you like.
