ORGANIC FUTURE BRIGHT, STUDIES SHOW

Greenfield, MA — The organic industry is set to enjoy good growth over the next 20 years, according to a new study by the Organic Trade Association (OTA), located here.

The OTA stated that by 2005 organic products will be considered "commonplace."

The findings, published early in December, are based on predictions by the industry research organizations, including the Natural Marketing Institute (NMI), Nutrition Business Journal (NBJ), and Packaged Facts, as well as leading organic producers Organic Valley, Smucker Quality Beverages and Stonyfield farm. In other news, NBJ reported, "The number of Americans who have tried organic food jumped to 65% in 2005 from 54% in 2003 and 2004, according to the 2005 Whole Foods Market Organic Trend Tracker. The annual survey also found a quarter of 1,000 survey respondents said they are consuming organic food more than they did a year ago, and 10% said they consume organic food several times per week, up from 7% the previous year. The top three reasons for buying organic food are pesticide avoidance (70.3%), freshness (68.3%) and nutrition (67.1%).

More than half (55%) buy organic to avoid genetically modified foods. More than half of all respondents agreed that organic foods and beverages are "better for my health" (52.8%) and better for the environment (52.4%).
