Basic bread dough has many variations

September is upon us and with it come thoughts of goodies baked in the oven. All summer we've avoided heating up the house with baking, so now it's time to take on a project to warm up the house on a bright, crisp fall day. After the recent column about bierrach filling I received several requests for the dough mentioned. The best feature of this dough is that it can be refrigerated for up to four days. It's ideal for a working woman who wants to make the dough one evening and finish the project later on.

Hot dinner rolls make a meal and they can be ready fast if this dough is in your refrigerator. They'll only take 30-45 minutes to rise after made up into Cloverleaves, Parker House or sesame seed buns. Italian braids are fast, just a few minutes to rise and bake and they go great with spaghetti or lasagna. Roll dough flat, cut in strips and twist or braid two together, brush with olive oil, sprinkle with herbs or poppy seeds and bake.

timers. My version of kolaches are just dough cut in circles and allowed to rise until they'll hold a three-finger indentation to secure the filling. No streusel here, though.

Cinnamon rolls can be made in the evening, covered tightly with plastic wrap and set out to rise the minute you're out of bed. By the time you're through the shower and dressed they'll be ready to bake. Serve hot cinnamon rolls and even the latest riser will find time for breakfast. And, as a bonus, the house will smell good all day!

Any kuchen or kolache filling works well with this dough. Roll dough flat and lay out on cookie sheet to make a kuchen base. My favorites are cottage cheese, poppy seed or prune but the old German schlexel or swartzedinger fillings are best of all, although hard to come by. Most people nowadays prefer cherry, peach, apple or apricot. Canned pie filling may be used as long as you don't say I told you so! Kuchen is topped with streusel crumbs, called ruffles by the old

Ovens differ, baking time will vary with what's created, but because this is very tender dough, it browns quickly. Moderate oven (350° F) and keep a sharp eye the first time you try it.

My mother's favorite sandwich was a hot dinner roll slathered with real butter and sandwiched around a big slice of Bermuda or Vidalia onion. It dripped and oozed but she loved it. My dad and I loved her fried bread. She took a bit of dough after the first punch down, patted it into a flat circle and browned both sides in a skillet with a skim of bacon drippings. Scramble an egg with cheese to top it and you'll have a fast yummy supper tonight.

REFRIGERATOR ROLL DOUGH
 Half a cup solid vegetable shortening (I use Crisco)
 Quarter cup sugar
 Teaspoon (tsp.) salt
 Two eggs
 One square Fleischman's cake yeast
 One cup warm water
 Four cups flour

Combine shortening, sugar, salt and eggs. Crumble and dissolve yeast cake in the warm water, let set until it "blooms". Mix into first mixture and add two cups of the flour. Mix well, work in the last two cups of flour. Dump dough out onto a floured linen towel; knead ten to twelve turns, until it looks glossy. Form into a ball and turn into a well oiled bowl, coating all surfaces with oil. Cover with a tea towel and let rise two hours in a warm area. Punch down to use right away or refrigerate for up to four days, covered snugly with plastic wrap.

This amount will make two kuchen crusts, two dozen dinner rolls or a dozen bierrach. Can use for kolaches, cinnamon rolls or Italian bread braids. If using for cinnamon rolls, kolache or kuchen, increase sugar. If using for bierrach or Italian braids, leave sugar same and add some garlic powder, or Parmesan cheese. Do not eliminate sugar entirely, however, or dough will not rise.
