Shrimpalicious delicacies

Cook's Corner

Liza Deines

From a recent letter: "Could you locate and run the recipe for Shrimp Enchiladas that was in your column several years back? I made it for my family and they loved it but now I can't find the clipping. They expect it every year during Lent." Sure, easy to find thanks to the wonders of electronics; the file popped right up when I inquired of my faithful computer.

This recipe holds special memories for us because Joan prepared it for LeRoy's sixty-fifth birthday. She and her son Chris flew up from Florida for the occasion, knowing it would likely be his final birthday. And what a birthday it was! His hospice girls and my dear friend Ruth threw a surprise birthday bash for him in the afternoon, to which they'd invited all of his bank buddies and downtown business companions. He couldn't talk much by then but his eyes sparkled as he welcomed his old friends with a big smile on his face. We topped off the day with this special dinner. I am so glad another family is enjoying Joan's Shrimp Enchiladas as much as we did.

JOAN'S SHRIMP ENCHILADAS
Twelve 6-inch flour tortillas

- One-pound bag of tiny frozen shrimp, thawed
- Two boxes frozen spinach, thawed and squeezed dry
- Six or eight little green onions, chopped (green part, too)
- One can low sodium cream of celery soup
- One 16-ounce carton low fat sour cream
- One teaspoon Old Bay seasoning, salt and pepper
- Two to three cups shredded Monterey Jack cheese
- Two 10-ounce cans green chile enchilada sauce
- Mix shrimp, spinach, seasonings, green onions and about half a cup of shredded cheese lightly together. Mix the soup and sour cream together with three tablespoons of the green chile sauce.
- Butter the bottom of a 9x13 glass baking dish and spread a light skim of the sour cream and soup mixture on bottom. Stir the remainder into the shrimp mixture.

Warm tortillas in a damp, heated paper towel so they will be easy to roll. Fill each tortilla with a couple of spoonfuls of shrimp filling. Roll up and place in pan with seam side down.

Pour the two cans of enchilada sauce evenly over the pan of rolled tortillas, top with a good layer of shredded cheese and bake in a 350 degree oven for 20-25 minutes until hot and bubbly. Let rest about 10 minutes before serving so the enchiladas will firm up a bit. Joan served this with black bean and corn salsa.

Shrimp in any form is one of my favorite foods, so when a resident here at The Carlyle offered me some shrimp dip left over from a family Super Bowl party, I accepted with alacrity and appetite. Shrimp dip is a very popular dish and I'd eaten a lot of it over the years but this one was just a bit different so, of course, I begged the recipe to share with you.

MARY LEE'S SUPER BOWL SHRIMP DIP
Two cans medium shrimp
Eight ounces Louis Kemp "krab" chunks
One tablespoon lemon juice
Three dashes Tabasco
One tablespoon Worcestershire

sauce
Eight ounces whipped cream cheese
Eight ounces sour cream
Two tablespoons shredded onion with juice
Two tablespoons teeny tiny diced celery bits
One tablespoon capers, squashed into paste with a fork
One envelope dry Italian salad dressing

Mix sour cream and cream cheese and all other ingredients except shrimp and crab. Fold them in last so they don't break up. Chill overnight. Serve with crackers, chips or fresh veggie sticks. If you are fortunate enough to have any leftover dip, this one is chunky enough to spread on toast for a light supper with a salad.

Shrimp Lovers, Alert! If you ever travel to Galveston, Texas, be sure to visit Gaido's Restaurant and order their "Angels on Horseback". Shrimp grilled on a skewer and served in a long, toasted bun doused with melted garlic butter. Extravagantly expensive both in calories and cash but so worth it!

MY MAMA SAID: Giving up something for Lent is not a sacrifice if you boast or complain about it.
