Halloween safety tips

Home ed Tranda Watts, Extension specialist

The excitement in choosing a costume and parading among neighbors and friends can distract children and make them more vulnerable to food-related hazards.

Limiting trick or treating to your immediate neighborhood or a community-sponsored event is recommended. Parents and children are urged to be cautious with holiday foods:

- * Offer a light meal or snack prior to trick or treating or other holiday events, so that children will be less hungry, less likely to eat on the run, and less likely to sample unknown treats.

- * Encourage children to respectfully decline candy and other foods that are not commercially packaged. Examples might include a homemade caramel apple or popcorn ball, hand full of peanuts or candy corn.

- * Be ready and waiting to help trick or treaters sort candy and discard treats containing known allergens (nuts, for example) and others that could cause choking (hard candy or small toy) or injury (such as a sharp pencil).

- * Encourage children to choose preferred treats and enjoy one or two, before storing candy out of site.

- * Integrate holiday candy into meals and snacks over the next few weeks to manage sweets and extend holiday enjoyment.

At community or other events, it is advised that parents 1) check to make sure cider is pasteurized, and 2) if bobbing for apples, wash apples before adding them to the tub.

At parties, scare bacteria away by keeping hot foods hot and cold foods cold. Keeping trays of party foods stored safely until goblins arrive, and, also, not leaving perishable food at room temperature for more than two hours is advised.

More information about food science and safety is available at your local K-State Research and Extension Office or by e-mailing Tranda Watts at: tw-watts@ksu.edu.
