

Struttin’ on the cat walk

The Norton Area Chamber of Commerce held a Spring Fashion Show last Friday evening at the Norton County Courthouse. Anna Lively and her puppy friend, Anna Bell, strutted their stuff on the cat walk while wearing items from Pamida. There were 35 models showing items from 17 local businesses, including everything from clothing to jewelry to shopping totes. “We will hold a fashion show again next year due to the huge public response received following the event,” reported Chamber Director Tarah Vance. “We wanted to showcase the local businesses at no cost to them. We are all about adding value to our Chamber membership.”

Roll call was taken. Several showed quilts made at a recent workshop and other projects made. New officers were elected and bills were approved. Instructions for the summer challenge were passed out. A couple of printed games were played and members worked on unfinished projects. Officers will meet June 14 to make plans for the new year starting in September.

The meeting of the Beta Alpha Chapter of Delta Kappa Gamma International was held on May 7 at Pure Prairie. Co-hostesses for the evening were Sandy Worden and Erin Manning. The members enjoyed a delicious meal. Following the meal, President Alberta Slaby called the meeting to order. Eighteen members and one guest were present. The minutes were approved as read, and the treasurer’s report was given. Nancy Sebelius won the Money the Fun Way prize. The chapter scholarship was discussed, and members decided to award scholarships to Ashley Smith-Maybon and to Austin Dole. Members voted to contribute $250 to the Norton Theater project. The meeting was adjourned with the club collect.

Portrayal of murder

The Norton First United Methodist Church held a fund-raising potato bar last Sunday and presented “I’m Getting Murdered in the Morning” by Lee Mueller. The play was directed by Doug and Nancy Sebelius and several church members acted it out as a comedy murder mystery that was set at a wedding reception where one of the guests is shot and killed. Pictured, Zach Combs portrays the father of the bride, deep in thought and expressing his feelings about the recent events that have occurred.

Making May baskets with mama

The lilacs out by the garden fence are all in bloom. It'll be a good day to take Marjorie Jean on a picnic. Usually I wish I were my friend Gwen. She is an only child and has lots of pretty clothes and toys but today I'm glad to be me. Gwen has "rose fever" and she can't be around flowers, even Mama's geraniums in pots, because they make her sneeze and wheeze. Our yard is just full of flowers so we always have bouquets all over the house, even in the bathroom. Mama loves flowers and she says they're about as close to Heaven as we get on earth.

"Where are you going with all that stuff?" she asks as I go through the kitchen loaded down with my little red doll bed full of Marjorie Jean and all her doll clothes. "Under the lilac bush," I tell her, "where it smells just beautiful." "Oh good," she says, "we'll have some for our baskets. Did you know today is the day to make May baskets?" Oh boy, oh boy, oh boy, do I love May basket day! "Now?" I ask. "Why not?" she says.

In no time I've put Marjorie Jean to bed for the day with "rose fever" and am back at the dining room table where Mama has just set down her scrap box. Daddy calls it her treasure trunk and he's right. It's a big, old Montgomery Ward box we got when Mama ordered blankets and it is just full of all kinds of stuff to make things. Mama saves pretty paper and ribbon from packages and leftover lace and eyelet ruffles from my dresses. And there's a whole book of wallpaper samples she got from the lumberyard and some paper doilies left from church circle and pipe cleaners and yarn and . . . well, everything we need to make May baskets.

First thing we go make some flour and water paste to stick on handles. You have to have good handles to hang them on doorknobs, see? And then you knock on the door and run hide because if they see you, they get a kiss. So the handles are really important and I get to do them. Mama folds little boxes out of the pretty fronts of old birthday cards and I paste the handles on. Then we paste together cones from wallpaper pages. And Mama makes curls by pulling ribbons with her little scissors and we paste those on, too, and some lace and little flowers cut out from a seed catalog.

Next we go to the kitchen to make cookies to go in the baskets. Mama makes the very best oatmeal raisin cookies in the whole world. We have to eat a few from the first pan to be sure they're good enough to give away. They are and I am glad we made a big batch so there'll be some left for supper. While Mama bakes I cut squares of waxed paper so we can wrap two for each basket. And we put in some gum sticks and some leftover Easter jelly beans, too.

"Let's go pick some lilacs," Mama says, "and see what else is blooming today." Out in the yard we find mostly dandelions but they look pretty and there are a few good tulips. Out by the barn is a nice patch of Star of Bethlehem and we pick mint sprigs for greenery.

Daddy comes home and sees the box of May baskets all ready to be delivered and he teases us. "I thought Liza Beth was too old for May baskets this year," he says, "but I guess Mama just can't give it up quite yet, hmmm?" We eat a quick supper and go out to deliver our elegant creations.

You know what? I think Mama had just as much fun as I did. Maybe more.
