The survivor's lap begins at 7 p.m. followed by the caregiver's lap, and then the teams begin walking around the track through the night to the dawn. Dawn is the symbol of the awful journey cancer victims follow, by walking to the dawn and their cure.

Entertainment will be presented in the band shell, along with the local basket auction and the luminaria service which will be held at dark.

Don't miss this moving ceremony and the evening of fund raising for a cure for cancer, said Betty Loudon, committee member.

Poetry Winner

Derek Queen was among the poetry winners in the freshman class. He will be having this poem published.

I Am Derek Queen Freshman

I am a teenage boy that is obsessed with football. I wonder if my love for football will take me anywhere in life. I hear the sound of the excited crowd if I break off a long run. I see the dimensions of the field on which I play. I want to have a successful career as a football player. I am a teenage boy that is obsessed with football. I pretend I am in the National Football League. I feel the eyes of the crowd beating down on us as we run out onto the field.

I touch the hard leather football.

I worry that I might make a vital mistake.

I cry after a crushing defeat.

I am a teenage boy that is obsessed with football.

I understand that I will fail every once in a while.

I say that football is a tremendous sport.

I dream of the day when I will start varsity.

I try to do my duty every play of the game.

I hope that someday I will play in the pros.

I am a teenage boy that is obsessed with football.
