The largest expenses for many livestock producers are feed costs. The recent explosion in the price of hay and grain has only added to to the Faylors. Then they go by plane back to their homes in Holland (the Netherlands.)

On Friday, Sept. 30, Sherri Morabito, Yvonne Clemans and Clemans' foster son from Burlington, spent the day at the Faylor Ranch, visiting Ellen and Anneke. Ellen and Sherri were in 12th grade together. Faylors visited with the ladies some, also. Dwight Faylor was 12 years old when Ellen lived with them.

is to help producers determine forages adapted to Northwest Kansas and livestock utilization of these forages.

We hope to test what forage varieties could be a viable option for producers to graze livestock on. In addition, we hope to get an idea of preference and palatability of the forages by cattle grazing the plot. In an exclusion area, the pounds of forage per acre will be determined.

There are 13 plot treatments - Wheats: Longhorn, TAM 112, Jagger, and Jagger+turnips; Triticale: ThunderCale, ThunderCale V, ThunderTall, Forrunner, Forrunner+turnips; Barley: P919, Verdant, Verdant+turnips; and Rye. There are three replications of the plots. The seeding rate is approximately 60 pounds per acre for the grains and 3 pounds per pound for the turnips. There will be signs put up this fall identifying each treatment, so producers can begin to utilize and learn from the plots.

We are planning to have a field day in the spring. There, we plan to have guest speakers and producers will learn about the options for small grain forages and how to utilize them in their production systems.

We hope the forage plot will be an annual project so we can gather data over an extended time period. The information we get from the plot will be able to be used by producers, so they can plant forages that work well as an alternative livestock feed in Northwest Kansas.
