RUNNERS

Beth had no intentions of ever running an event.

Wine and Dine half marathon

There is a half marathon in Disney World that caught my eye, Terry said. It is called the Wine and Dine and takes place in November. It's unique in that you run at night. After the 13.1 miles, runners and their families had EPCOT to themselves. The festival was wrapping up that day and we got to partake in all the food stands. There were 13 other countries represented above what was already at EPCOT.

Run 13 miles and eat and drink until 4 in the morning! That was great fun. Terry said.

At the health expo associated with this race, Mary Beth and I listened to former marathon Olympian and now motivational speaker, Jeff Galloway, talk about running. He was so good, Terry said, and he got Mary Beth fired up and she decided she'd like to run a half marathon. Terry looked into having Mary Beth run with Sheryl at the Disneyworld Half Marathon, but it was sold out. We tried every avenue, he said, and finally someone in a tour group had canceled so we were able to get her regis-

That gave Mary Beth two months to train, which isn't a lot, Terry said. We mainly trained on a treadmill since it had been so cold. Sheryl teaches fitness classes so there was no worry about her. Sara lives in Los Angeles and runs once in awhile. None of us really trained like you probably should.

Running a half marathon, Mary Beth said, is a challenge as it requires a commitment of physical endurance. But what I found is that the mental endurance and self discipline was even harder.

Sheryl and Mary Beth ran on Saturday and completed the race beating many other runners. There were around 60,000 runners in that race!

Sara and Terry ran on Sunday. It was 80+ degrees at the end of the race, Terry said, and I was not having fun. I had started getting a calf cramp at mile 15 so the last 7 miles were run 4 minutes and walk a minute. Sara was still fresh and ready to keep going, but she was a good daughter and waiting back for her flailing, old dad!

line holding hands together, raised high in the air. I was wearing a KU shirt and the announcer at the finish line shouted out "Rock Chalk Jayhawks!" "I was young again!"

I was incredibly happy I was able to cheer my dad and Sara on during one of life's greatest physical and mental challenges--a full marathon! Sheryl said. They made it look effortless, fun even.

"I've always loved running," Sara said, "but I'll admit, running my first race alone was tough. Having my family run with me is to have my best friends run with of all shapes, sizes and ages out me, and it's so amazing to cross there. It was encouraging that in the finish line and have someone to share the joy and accomplishment with. I can't imagine ever running a race without them again."

"Although this was my first half marathon, I was never nervous am blessed with such an amazbecause I knew the people I love ing family," Sheryl said. "I can't and care about the most in this world would be cheering me on,"

However, they crossed the finish Sheryl said. "It was great running with my mom. She is one of my best friends and I am glad we were able to share the experience.

The family has decided to run at least two more times. With Marvin, the real runner in the family on board now, they are going to run the Disneyland Half this year and then hit the east coast and run the Wine and Dine Half.

As with any challenge in life, Dr. Miller said, you find that you learn something from going through it. I was amazed by the myriad of others having this same experience. There were people this age of obesity and poor health habits, there are large numbers of people embracing a healthier side of living

"I thank God every day that I wait until we can all run together

There were two areas of obvious interest: bridges and an assisted living facility. Supervisor Flemming was interested in getting help with bridge building especially the bridge north of St. Francis by the River Walk. He said this bridge needs to be replaced but half of it belongs to the county and the other half belongs to the city of St. Francis.
