The Gardener

You know the routine. If you're a wild-eyed, avid gardener, you spend the winter months trying to decide what to plant, when to plant it, and where to plant it. You buy your seed, check out the worthiness of the gardening equipment you will be using, and then you pester the life out of family members and friends complaining about how cold it is and how slow the winter days go by.

Then, when you reach that magical moment when you determine it's time to plant onions and radishes, you look outside and there's 15 inches of snow on your garden plot and the soil temperature is 38 degrees at the 4-inch depth under buffalo soil!

You begin to panic! You suddenly realize it's going to be almost two weeks before you can realistically plant anything out there, and only then if it doesn't rain or snow anymore which it surely will. So you begin again to pester family members and friends and try to convince them that there just might not BE a garden this year!

Not to worry. Change your plans. And then offer up a little prayer of thanks for the abundant moisture we have received at a time of the year when we need it the most.

The radishes and onions will happily wait, and so will the peas, the spinach, the lettuce and the potatoes. The spuds may grow long sprouts before you can plant them, but that's alright. Gives them a headstart when you DO plant them.

If you have onion plants ready to go, just leave them in a cool, airy place. Do not put them in water or wet garden soil. They are in dormancy, and will stay in that state safely for at least a month.

All the aforementioned vegetables are considered to be "early season" crops and can be planted in late March when soil temperatures are approaching 45 degrees. Now, because of the great moisture, we must delay our plantings. Don't even think about planting when it's muddy out there, or even wet. We have a growing season of about 150 days or more in the High Plains, so there is plenty of time to plant when the soil is ready.

There is a downside. Because of late planting, you may get only one "picking" of peas before June heat comes in and causes them to quit blooming. Spinach and lettuce may offer up a shorter period of harvest before they begin to bolt in the heat. In the case of potatoes, most varieties we plant will produce good crops even in warmer soils. I seldom plant spuds before April 15, and I know of a couple of gardeners who never plant them until around July 1. They claim that warmer soils enhance tuber size.

So, relax a little. Sharpen your hoe. Again. Review your planting location plan. If you decide not to plant peas and spinach because you feel it's too late, decide now what you will plant in their space. Quit pestering family members and friends about the lateness of the season, unless we get a big snow-storm in mid-April. If that happens then I'LL pester your family members and friends!
