-The Gardener

Several years may have passed since you last planted potatoes in May. The same can be said for peas. Or onions. Or radishes, lettuce, spinach, or even broccoli and cabbage. You may never have planted those early spring vegetables so late in the season for crying out loud!

I normally plant peas about But listen to me! Rather than April 10, which I did this year. But I know many of you didn't get them in the ground by then due to snow, cold, and other freakish weather activities. My peas didn't emerge for three but it's almost certain that you'll for this time of year because of temperatures lower than I wish

> So, if you were to plant peas and onions and the other early stuff now, chances are they would soon catch up with my "slow growing" things rather quickly. That is of course unless we somehow, some way, impossibly find ourselves in the midst of some kind of mid-May winter fracas. If that happens, you're on your own, and I have four or five dozen very nice home-grown tomato plants for sale, cheap!

> It could happen of course. The latest there has ever been a freezing temperature here in Sherman County since weather records have been kept, was on June 2, 1951, when the thermometer dropped to 31 degrees. Indeed, that had to be hard on the zucchini!

> To show the significance of the coolness of the current season, the Extension Service said that this is the latest, ever, for the start of the corn-planting season. There had been no corn planted in Kansas as of May 2nd. And here I am sitting around crying about my enforced tardiness in planting broccoli.

> All this talk about the "late season" and "abnormal spring" and "what am I gonna do" makes sense when you consider what happened last spring. For example, there was not a single freezing temperature recorded in the month of April last year in my garden. Not one. This year, April may go down as one of the coldest ever, and may have set records for most April snowfall. And already here in May, we have had two nights of sub-freezing temperatures. Where in the world is Al Gore when you need him!

> But I hereby predict that we will survive the season and soon be enjoying beautiful flowers in those patio pots around the High Plains and tasty red radishes will adorn the kitchen table over there by the salt shaker! And that magnificent spinach salad?...uh, I'm still not sure about the spinach salad.
