Student receives band recognition

Logan Whitmore, a freshman at Kansas State University and member of the university's marching band, was recently awarded one of four "Rookie of the Year" awards.

Toward the end of the season, said Dr. Frank Tracz, director of bands and professor of music, the staff and I get together and discuss the students who immediately came to mind as being very positive and productive members of the marching band.

Logan had a leg injury and was on the sidelines for the first part of the season but, Dr. Tracz said, he was still very active in playing his trumpet, memorizing music, and learning the "drill" from a stand on the sidelines position.

Eventually he healed well enough to march some replacement positions while other members were at class or injured themselves.

"He literally marched a wide variety of instrument spots and did so with great energy, enthusiasm and will to succeed that was second to none," he said. "The kid never quit trying until he eventually was one of the most inspirational and motivational members we had this past year."

The staff, he said, was unanimous in their decision to award him the Rookie of the Year award. He is a great kid with a great attitude and work ethic!

Logan, the son of Jerry and Lila Whitmore, St. Francis, is a 2012 St. Francis Community High School graduate.

LOGAN WHITMORE, when needed, played the tuba in the K-State marching band.
