Time change over the weekend will allow for more time for readin

Daylight savings ends this weekend and I can't say I'm sorry to see it go. I like the longer hours of daylight in the spring and summer, but I sure don't like getting up when it's dark in the fall. So now that it will get darker earlier in the evenings, I'll have more time to curl up with a good book and read. Makes sense to me. And speaking of good books to read, here are a few you might Nobody Knows by Mary Jane Clark is a psychological thriller following her other hits like Do You Want to Know a Secret? and Do You Promise Not to Tell? This one stars Cassie Sheridan, a Washington, D.C. television news reporter with a skyrocketing career until she makes a critical mistake and everything falls apart. She is transferred to Miami to wait out the end of her contract. Little does she know that a killer is watching and waiting.

Ms Clark (former daughter-in-law of author Mary Higgins Clark) should know about news reporting as she is a writer for CBS Television news.

Summerland by Pulitzer prize winning author Michael Chabon, creates a whole new universe richly drawn from American folklore, with legend- you'll be interested to note that her she will have a new one out soon fea-

And speaking of Janet Evanovich,

tion is not a Stephanie Plum mystery at all, but a mass-market romance. The book called Full House isn't exactly an original publication as it first appeared in 1989 under her pseudonym Steffie Hall. That was before she switched from writing romance to mystery. Since hitting the jackpot with her Stephanie Plum novels, she decided to kick off a new series she hopes her

She took the original Full House, enlarged the story and added to the characters and created a slightly offcenter love story about a devious man, an uncooperative woman, and a misguided genius. The reviews vary from 'Bravo! Give me more!" to "Waste of time, "so it will be interesting to see how or if this series pleases fans.
