Tips offered on reward system

How to discipline their child effectively is something that most parents struggle with. Much is said and written about the use of rewards, praise and positive reinforcement. According to Steven Bavalke, PhD, author of the "Nurturing Program for Parents and Children," using objects, gifts or money as rewards for good behavior can have various results.

In moderation, there is nothing terrible about giving your child a gift or having him/her earn money to buy something they want. In fact, earning money for completing chores can be a good way to teach older children about money management.

Often though, this reward technique is misused. According to Bavalke, when the great percentage of rewards children receive are "things," there is a risk that children will learn that behaving leads to the acquisition of material goods, rather than learning to behave because it is the right or appropriate thing to do.

A community service from the High Plains Mental Health Center

The result can be a child who responds based on the attitude of "What am I going to get if I behave?" Parents also need to be careful about rewards that become bribes; such as "If you behave at the store today, you will get an ice cream cone." Cooperation should not be something that a parent has to purchase from their child.

Bavalke suggests that rather than using material goods or money as reward, parents would benefit greatly from learning techniques that include the use of praise and nurturing touch. Misbehavior is obvious and parents readily respond.

But they also need to let their child know when they are doing good in the little everyday matters, such as playing well with their sibling or friends, keeping their voice calm in a difficult situation, or getting ready for bed without being told. Kids need hugs from parents too. Not only when they've done something special, but on a regular basis, just because they are special.

Tuesday's showing will be The Expedition of Lewis & Clark, which acknowledges the bicentennial of the Corps of Discovery.

The film includes diary excerpts and the landscape to illustrate the Expeditions objectives and accomplishments.

Wednesday's and Thursday's programs will deal with the Territorial Days of Kansas. The topic of the Kansas Chautauqua, which Colby is hosting in June, is Bleeding Kansas: Where the Civil War Began. These videos were selected to familiarize the community with the subject.

On Wednesday, the video will be Sunflower Journeys: Osawatimie to Ft. Scott. This program is from the series produced by Topeka pub-
