There's many fields available in mental health, expert says

The field of mental health includes many kinds of service providers including psychiatrists, psychologists, social workers, counselors and case managers. one of many specialists in the field is that of child psychiatrist.

A child and adolescent psychiatrist is a physician who specializes in the diagnosis and treatment of disorders of thinking, feeling and behavior that affect children, adolescents and their families.

Their education and training requires four years of medical school, at least three years of approved residency training in medicine, neurology and general psychiatry work with adults and two years of additional specialized training in psychiatric work with children, adolescents and their families.

Special importance is given to disorders that appear in childhood such as pervasive developmental disorder, attention-deficit hyperactivity disorder, learning disabilities, mental retardation, mood disorders, depressive and anxiety disorders, drug dependency and delinquency (conduct disorder).

The child and adolescent psychiatrist uses knowledge of biological, psychological and social factors in working with clients, with attention to physical, genetic, developmental, emotional, cognitive, educational, family, peer and social components.

The psychiatrist arrives at a diagnosis, then in conjunction with the client and the family, designs a treatment plan to help those involved to work towards a successful outcome. This integrated approach may involve individual, group or family psychotherapy, medication, or consultation with others involved, including schools, juvenile courts, social agencies or other community organizations.

Child and adolescent psychiatrists can be located by contacting local mental health centers, hospitals, school counselors, family physicians and national organizations like the American Psychiatric Association.

Women's rights advocate, former Kansas dean of women dies at 89

LAWRENCE (AP) — Emily Taylor, a longtime champion of women's causes and the former dean of women of the University of Kansas has died at the age of 89.

Taylor died Saturday in Lawrence, where she had made her home since retiring as the director of the Office of Women in Higher Education at the American Council on Education in Washington D.C., the university announced Saturday.

Memorial services for Taylor are pending.

As the university's dean of women from 1956 to 1975, Taylor established what now is known as the Emily Taylor Women's Resource Center for students of both sexes. She also founded the nation's first university student commission on the status of women, which still exists.

Taylor moved to the American Council on Education in 1975 and retired from that post in 1982. She had lived in Lawrence since 1986.

She continued to travel the country as a consultant on women, education, health care and end-of-life issues.

While she was leading the Office of Women in Higher Education, she helped establish a national program to identify women for high-level university administration jobs. Hundreds of women from that program now are presidents or chancellors of U.S. colleges and universities or serving in high administrative posts.

She served on the Kansas Governor's Commission on the Status of Women from 1969 to 1975 and was appointed to the Maryland Commission on the Status of Women in 1975. She also was president of the National Association of Commissions for Women from 1975 to 1977.

Taylor was born Mary Emily Taylor on April 13, 1915, in Columbia, Ala. She graduated from DeGraff (Ohio) High School and received an associate's degree from Urbana Junior College, bachelor's and master's degrees from Ohio State University and a doctorate from the Indiana University.
