Artists have first meeting of the season

High Plains Art Club members held their first meeting of the season at South Wind Plaza on Tuesday, Sept. 14. Rosie Van Dyke was welcomed as a new member. Refreshments for the day were furnished by Jo Bricker.

After working on their individual works of art during the morning session and going to lunch together, they visited Van Dykes home to view her many works of art.

In the afternoon session, president, Marlene Carpenter, presented a program on watercolorist, John Cody, who lives in Hays with his wife.

They have three children. Cody was born in 1925 and has had an interest in moths since he studied them in college when he took a course in entomology.

He later went to medical and has been a practicing psychiatrist for more than 25 years, something he says he did, in part, so that he could afford to paint.

Colby's High Plains Art Club members were honored at a reception at the Carnegie Art Center in Goodland recently during the showing of their paintings that are on display at the center. The Colby art club show will continue until October 29. During his lifetime, Cody has traveled all over the world studying moths and painting intricate watercolors of the many varieties of these insects with appropriate foliage backgrounds.

Cody's paintings are so life-like that many of them have been published in the Audubon Magazine. Prints of his painting are for sale at the John Cody Gallery in Gatlinburg Tennessee and a full color book has been published about his life and with prints of his paintings. In 1990 he had a one man showing at the Smithsonian in Washington D.C. After the program a business meeting was held and the Club's art show at the Prairie Museum of Art and History was discussed. The club members felt that the show was a success. The art show to be held at the Carnegie Art Center in Goodland, opening on Oct. 3, was also discussed. Club Treasurer, Bev Kern, informed the ladies that they should have their artwork at the Center in Goodland on Oct. 2. Secretary, Marj Brown collected a description of the paintings each person will take to the show and sent the information requested to the Center. The club will meet again on Tuesday, Oct. 12, at South Wind Plaza at 10:00 a.m. with Jo Bricker as program chairman and Bev Kern as hostess. All local artists are invited to join them.
