Unordered items can be kept by person

Dear Attorney General Kline:
I recently received two books in the mail which I did not order. About ten days later I received a bill for the books and a letter demanding payment. What should I do with this merchandise?

Dear Kansas Consumer:
Scams involving unordered merchandise are becoming more and more common involving several types of products - magazines, CD's, DVD's, or clothing — and a variety of situations.

For example, in one instance you might answer an advertisement offering a free "trial" pair of pantyhose but instead you receive four pair along with a bill. Or, you might receive a collectible pocket knife you did not order and despite your objections, the company continues to demand payment and threatens to damage your credit rating if you do not pay.

In short, when you receive merchandise you did not order, you do not have to pay for it. Federal laws prohibit mailing unordered merchandise to consumers and then demanding payment.

If you keep unordered merchandise without paying for it you have no legal obligation to notify the seller, however it is a good idea to write a letter to the company stating that you did not order the item and you have a legal right to keep it for free. Doing this may discourage the seller from sending you bills or it may help clear up an honest error. Send your letter by certified mail, keep the return receipt and a copy of the letter for your records.

If the unordered merchandise is the result of an honest shipping error then you should write the seller and offer to return the merchandise, provided the seller pays for the postage and handling. It's a good idea to give the seller a reasonable period of time (maybe 30 days) to pick up the merchandise or arrange to have it returned at no expense to you. Tell the seller that you reserve the right to keep the merchandise or dispose of it after the specified time has passed.

Keep in mind that some merchandise may be sent to you legally without your consent. You may receive samples that are clearly marked free, and merchandise from charitable organizations asking for contributions. You may keep these shipments as free gifts.

Remember, when you participate in sweepstakes or order goods advertised as "free," "trial," or "unusually low priced," be cautious. Be sure to read all the fine print to determine if you are actually joining a "club" with regular purchasing or notification obligations. Keep a copy of the advertisement or catalog that led you to place the order which should make it easier to contact the company if the need arises.

Again, it's always a good idea to try to resolve disputes directly with the company. If this doesn't work, you can contact Consumer Protection Division at 1-800-432-2310.
