Equipment used in Colby, Rexford and Brewster was discussed Monday by Thomas County Commissioners.

Marty Rinehart, assistant emergency medical service director, told commissioners an ambulance in Rexford is being repaired.

"Right now we are waiting on an electrical inverter coming back from Colorado where it's getting fixed," Rinehart said. "The estimated repair will be $795, versus $12,000 for a new one.'

Rinehart said it has not been determined whether lightning or a power surge damaged the inverter in the 1995 ambulance. Also being replaced is the alternator for $371.

Rinehart, along with interim director Kenny Gatlin, told commissioners the emergency medical service uses a five-year replacement program.

"We only buy one truck at a time," Rinehart said. "When we get to the last payment on a truck a year before it's paid off we look at what truck we need to replace it with and bring you proposals."

Thomas County Clerk Shelly Harms told commissioners she was uncertain whether schedules were to be made for public transportation vans stored in Brewster and Rexford. In January, it was decided the van owned by the county would pick up residents twice a month in Brewster and Rexford and transport them to Colby. However, all three commissioners were not aware both towns owned their own vans.

"We'll need to talk about the vans with the mayors of Brewster and Rexford," Evans said.

Harms said although the county's van is currently scheduled to pick up residents at Brewster City Hall at 9 a.m. on the first and third Tues-

She also applied for an "Enhancing Education Through Technology" grant from the state. The district was awarded one of the grants before, but can't apply for the same school twice.

Katrina exposed a government indifferent to disaster

The Associated Press obtained a copy of the report Tuesday night.

"The preparation for and response to Hurricane Katrina should port, written by a Republican-dominated special House committee chaired by Rep. Tom Davis, R-Va. "Passivity did the most damage," lives, prolonged suffering, and left all Americans justifiably concerned our government is no better prepared to protect its people than it was before 9/11, even if we are."

The hard-hitting findings allocated blame to state and local authorities and concluded that the federal government's single largest failure was in not recognizing Katrina's likely consequences as it approached. That could have prompted a mobilization of federal assets for a post-storm evacuation of a flooded New Orleans, the report said, meaning aid "would have House homeland security adviser arrived several days earlier."

It also found that Bush could have speeded the response by becoming involved in the crisis earlier and says he was not receiving guidance from a disaster specialist who would have understood the scope of the storm's destruction.

"Earlier presidential involvement might have resulted in a more effective response," the inquiry concluded.

White House spokesman Allen Abney declined to comment Tuesday night. On Monday, White Frances Fragos Townsend said Bush was "fully involved" in Washington's preparations and response to Katrina.

The inquiry into one of the nation's worst natural disasters looked at everything from the evacuation to the military's role to planning for emergency supplies and in each category found much to criticize. The House study is the first to be completed in a series of inquiries by Congress and the Bush administration into the massive failures exposed by Katrina.

State's equipment tax could end

TOPEKA (AP) — The House ment and machinery.

The House is expected to approve to the Senate. The measures would affect purchases made after June 30.

The first bill covers all machinery and equipment purchased or leased by companies, while a companion bill covers telecommunications and railroads specifically. The "My deputies continue to do an proposals are patterned after an initiative Gov. Kathleen Sebelius outlined during her State of the State address, designed to stimulate the economy and improve the business our investigations of drug posses-climate by encouraging investment in new machinery and equipment.

The tax on machinery and equipto a pair of bills that would phase out annually. Existing equipment would continue to be taxed until it was replaced. Counties and cities would receive state payments for both bills Wednesday, sending them five years to mitigate the loss of property tax revenue.

Local governments would be reimbursed for the difference between the taxes levied in 2005 and 2007. After that, the reimbursement would drop 20 percent each year through 2013.

The reimbursement would cost the state roughly $177 million in total through 2013.

Amendments to increase the reimbursement to rural counties by $50 million annually were defeated Tuesday, largely by urban representatives.

Rural representatives argued that urban counties such as Johnson,

Sedgwick and Shawnee would see the greatest benefit from removing the business tax, leaving rural counties to shift the tax burden to residential property owners to finance local government.

"Counties losing population have to raise property taxes to do the services that their counties need. This is to reduce property taxes, not give them more money," said Rep. Larry Powell, R-Garden City, who offered the amendment.

The bill was amended to increase tax breaks for residential property owners. The first expands a state homestead exemption to cover about 20,000 homeowners age 65 and older with incomes of $50,000 or less.

The second increases the exemption on residential property that is assessed for the statewide school tax
