Flowers need food, too

MANHATTAN — The exceptions include such blooming beauties as the astilbe, chrysanthemum, delphinium, lupine and summer phlox.

“They tend to need more fertilizer than the average flowering perennial. I’d recommend feeding them every year,” said Ward Upham, horticulturist with Kansas State University Research and Extension.

In general, however, most garden perennials aren’t heavy feeders.

They appreciate an annual feeding while getting established. But, they can go longer between meals after that.

“They’ll tell you when they’re starting to get into trouble,” Upham said. “They’ll get weaker, and their foliage will become a lighter green or even yellowish.”

The time to feed flowering perennials is in spring, just as their new growth begins, he said.

The kind of fertilizer to use depends on the plant and the soil where it’s growing.

“The only sure way to know is by learning about the kinds of plants you’re growing and by getting a soil test every three to five years,” Upham said. “For example, Kansas soils tend to be fairly alkaline. If that’s true where you live, your soil’s pH could be a problem for such acid-loving plants as lupines, Oriental lilies, ferns and heathers.

“Many Kansas soils naturally have enough potassium and potash, too. If a soil test indicates that’s so where you garden, you’ll know using a balanced garden fertilizer could be a bad idea.”

Winona residents head for Hawaii

Escaping the ill winds of February and March were Danny and Ellen Lewallen who spent two weeks in Hawaii on the island of Kauai. Danny’s parents, Jack and Edith Lewallen, of Buena Vista, Colo. accompanied them. It was whaling season and Ellen said, “We spent hours watching the whales.”

The first Sunday of Lent was special during the morning worship service and the church school hour at the Winona U.M. Church. Several family units were present at Hillery of Scott City and Jay and Joy Haverfield, Max and Heath of Topeka were among the visitors. Max sang “Amazing Grace” accompanied by his mother, Joy Haverfield.

Robert Lewallen led the first in a series of a Lenten bible study to an intergenerational group. Light refreshments were served. The theme for Lent this year is nourishment for the body and feast for the spirit.

How I will miss chatting with John Dean at the landfill! On one occasion when Dean Rogge surveyed my cast-offs destined for the pit, I asked him if the “kids” were home for the holiday. He said, “Jeannie, that’s not news — every Sunday is a holiday at our place.” What better legacy could a father leave? Our condolences to the Rogge families.

Grant and Heather Garrison and Orrin of Colorado Springs, Colo. called on Bob and Virginia Arnberger this week. They had a telephone call from Astra’ Tuley. The granddaughters, Heather and Astra’, were here for their grandfather, Dean Rogge’s funeral.

Prayer chains have kept people on their knees a lot this week. Among those being prayed for are Joy Haverfield, Judy Parsons, Herb Russell, Evelyn Langdon, Virginia Arnberger, Rose Mary Koster, and of course, all their families. The community is saddened to hear of the death of Judy Parsons.

On a lighter note, recognition was given to the Butterfield Trail Museum in Russell Springs in the first week of March edition of the “American Profile.” The issues are “chock-full” of human interest stories and are tucked in many end-of-the-week newspapers. I look forward to the midwest edition of “American Profile” in the Colby Free Press.

Ruth Smith, Rachael Smith, LaVonne Baxter and Jean Lowe attended the Pride of the Prairie Orchestra concert in Goodland Sunday.

A sight to behold was Thursday morning’s ten-o’clock sky. If you viewed it and it didn’t stir the intensity of your emotions nothing could. The clouds were like huge chunks of meringue stuck at random on a solid azure blue background.

Through-out the day the clouds became mottled with blotches of color showing through. Temperatures in the 50’s and not a leaf stirring made one rejoice and know, “This is the day the Lord hath made.” Spring showers surely can’t be too far away.
