Keep Beneficial Insects Working in Your Cornfields

Western bean cutworm and southwestern corn borer are regular corn pests in these parts. While many insecticides will provide excellent control, they also eradicate beneficial insects that help suppress damaging insects.

Keeping beneficial insects like spiders, pirate bugs, damsel bugs and ladybeetles working for you is important to the suppression of mites and certain worms, such as western bean cutworm and corn borers. The novel activity of Intrepid[®] 2F insecticide will provide control of these tough pests without impacting populations of beneficial insects.

Intrepid offers a unique mode of action that causes molting acceleration in insects for effective, long-lasting control of key worms. When ingested by target insects, Intrepid mimics the insect's natural molting hormone and induces a premature lethal molt of the larvae within hours. • Use Intrepid at egg hatch or when infestations reach economic thresholds • For corn borer, apply after corn has tasseled to control second-generation infestations. • Under heavy infestations of western bean cutworm, continuous moth flights or rapid crop growth and development, reapply Intrepid at five- to 10-day intervals, if needed, based on scouting.

Methoxyfenozide, the active ingredient in Intrepid® 2F insecticide, was awarded the EPA's Presidential Green Chemistry Challenge Award, which recognizes technologies that incorporate the principles of and use. For more
