Brewster city-wide clean-up Saturday down for Bingo soon. Vicky (Hawkins) Dumler visited her Dad, Gene Hawkins for a few days last week. Was good to see her at the Center. Seven seniors from Brewster attended the RSVP Banquet in Colby on April 18. Believe the evening was enjoyed by all. Thanks Laura for a great evening. Last night, Monday, April 23, had some severe weather around the area. When the siren sounded I think most took cover. It's nice in a small community like this that you know you are welcome to go to a neighbor's home if you don't have a basement. That's what small towns are all about, watching out for each other. Guess there was some damage done at the Wayne Luckert's farm south of town. If you need to have a garage sale, Brewster will be the place to be on Saturday, June 2. If you are interested in participating in Brewster's Annual City Wide Garage Sale Please call 694-2791. More information will be available as the time gets closer. The Song of Solomon, Chapter 8, verse 7 reminds us "Many waters cannot quench love; rivers cannot wash it away." In other words, no matter what happens, love will stand. We often forget this when we are hurt or disappointed by someone we love. We may strike out or say things which we later regret, because under our hurt and anger, there is love. Even when the time comes to end a relationship, under the pain, fear, confusion, there is love. If you love someone, do not deny it. You can be angry or hurt or even ready to move on, but let the love come through your words and actions. If you are leaving someone, do it with love. Be mindful not to allow shame, guilt, or anger to drown out the love you have shared. If you are being left by someone, stay in love. A departure of the person does not mean the end of love. Like water, love must flow. It changes forms. The tides of love must change. Always remember the way love brought you into a situation, because that same love will get you out of a situation.

Beyond the backsplash: Tile is everywhere

(AP) — Bejeweled, speckled and shimmering with flecks of gold, the newest tiles are going way beyond the backsplash, brightening living spaces all over the house. Improvements in the past 20 years in firing, glazing and cutting technology have made tile easier and, in some instances, less costly to manufacture while creating a new luxury category of visually appealing high-gloss finishes, textures and designs. American consumers last year laid 3.3 million square feet of ceramic tile, boosting sales of the $3.3 billion tile market 3.2 percent in 2006, according to data from the Tile Council of North America provided by Coverings, the recent international ceramic and natural stone tile trade show in Chicago. "The most interesting thing in the market, and what defines tile today, is the glaze and the way it's used to give tile a striking appearance, reflecting light and in multiple colors," said Artistic Tile's Nancy Epstein, herself a tile designer and the principal tile buyer for her company, which has showrooms in New York and New Jersey. "The glaze really makes the piece. If you put a matte, shiny, crackle or glass-like glaze on the tile surface, it's going to totally change the look of the tile no matter what its shape or size." Relatively new is a single-fire technology for glazing porcelain with textures, grooves and patterns that give tile a three-dimensional feel, such as the weave of a linen suit, or the ridges in a sisal rug, Epstein said. Additionally, stone cutting machinery has evolved so that tile slabs are now cut thinner from rare stones normally found at the top of quarries. Mosaics can also be customized in all different sizes and shapes, Epstein explained. "They can take any color marble and combine it with any other color, they can add glass to it, they can add metal and put it all together and have it mesh mounted or tape-faced ready to be installed." These versatile surface coverings can convey personal style and glamour. They are becoming a main visual attraction, or an art element, on high-profile walls, ceilings and flooring, perhaps in a foyer or bedroom, designers say.
