

Hot off the shelf for summer

Summer is a hot time for new books.

We are ordering them in and getting them on the shelves as quickly as possible. At the rate the books are flying off the shelves, make sure you get here ASAP! If a book is gone by the time you get to the library, let us know what you want.

We will get you on the "hold" list for the next available time the book is ready for check-out.

Here are some of the newest bestsellers at the library.

The book everyone seems to be talking about is "A Thousand Splendid Suns" by Khaled Hosseini, author of the bestselling novel "The Kite Runner."

Set again in his homeland of Afghanistan, Hosseini takes us on a personal journey into the lives and customs, hope and despair of the Afghan people. The storyline takes place over the course of three decades and focuses on a family that, over time, evolves into two wives (Mariam and Laila) and a merciless husband, Rasheed.

By law and by custom in Afghan society, women are considered more property than people. Ultimately this gives the patriarch of a family nearly unrestrained power to do as he wishes under his roof. Under these circumstances and through the incessant wars that have plagued a hardened country, Mariam and Laila form an unlikely friendship and alliance that gives them hope to survive and endure all the negatives and a few of the redeeming moments that Afghanistan has to offer.

Something much closer to home and much more familiar to American history is a hot new bestseller by Walter Isaacson titled "Einstein: His Life and Universe."

We are well acquainted with the contributions that Einstein made to science. We are well aware of the charisma and public personality of Einstein.

But how much do we really know about the person and the history behind the Scientist?

In this book, Isaacson delves deep into the shadows of the personal side of Albert Einstein. This biography brings into focus the history and personal side of Einstein by researching previously unreleased documents. With a fresh perspective from a proven author, the reader is given a better sense of who, what and why Einstein became the man we so fondly remember.

And for a thrilling finish read bestselling author John Sandford. We have all preyed for another intense crime novel and Sandford delivers with his latest book "Invisible Prey." This is the 18th book in Sandford's Prey series and back at it again is investigative sleuth, Lucas Davenport.

At first, the murder of an elder lady of means and avid collector of art is a simple case of theft that ended with an unfortunate death. However, the clues in a number of subsequent murders seem to be pointing back towards the original case.

The story, narrated through the perspective of the bad guys, takes on an insane twist when Davenport develops the sense that just maybe the killers are baiting him. Read the thriller "Invisible Prey" to discover the agenda of the murderers.

Kansas could get $335 million for uninsured children

WASHINGTON (AP) — Kansas could get $335 million in new money for uninsured children if Congress increases funding for a federal children's health care insurance program, according to a report released Thursday by a consumer health advocacy group.

The study from Families USA, a group that promotes universal health care coverage, said the funds would help Kansas expand health coverage for the 49,462 uninsured children in the state.

Two-thirds of those are currently eligible for HealthWave, the state's health insurance program for needy children.

Democrats want to boost spending for the State Children's Health Insurance Program, or S-CHIP, by $50 billion over the next five years. The House and Senate are expected to vote on the proposal later this year.

The report said that in addition to helping uninsured children, additional money for the program will boost the Kansas economy by funneling $144.8 million in increased business activity, $50.7 million in increased wages and 1,759 new jobs in the state.

Families USA based its projections on data from the Centers for Medicare and Medicaid Services. It's also predicated on the current S-CHIP allocation formula and Medicaid expenditures for children.

Sen. Pat Roberts, R-Kan., said he has urged his colleagues on the Senate Finance Committee to make the reauthorization of the S-CHIP program a top priority.

"In order to grow the success of the S-CHIP program, it is essential to provide additional funding," Roberts said in a statement.

The program will expire this year unless Congress renews it before Sept. 30. The program, which began in 1998, targets children whose families earn too much money to qualify for Medicaid but not enough to afford private insurance. Kansas receives $2.60 for every dollar it spends on the S-CHIP portion of HealthWave. This matching formula is more generous than the matching formula provided to Kansas under the Medicaid program.

"You'd better believe I'll fight every step of the way for renewal," Rep. Nancy Boyda, D-Kan., said in a statement. "We cannot sit by as millions of American children lose access to high-quality health care."

Envionmentalists sue Kansas to force CO2 regulations

TOPEKA (AP) — Hoping to force Kansas to regulate carbon dioxide emissions, two environmentalists who oppose new coal-fired plants for generating electricity have sued the state agency that regulates air quality.

The lawsuit by Sarah and Raymond Dean, of Lawrence, came less than two months after the U.S. Supreme Court declared CO2 pollutant to be regulated under the federal Clean Air Act.

Scientists view carbon dioxide as a major contributor to global warming.

But the Kansas Department of Health and Environment, like the federal government, doesn't set standards for CO2 emissions. The Deans said in their lawsuit that the agency has the authority to set standards but refused to do so when they requested it. KDHE says it must wait on the federal government.

They made their request in response to plans by Sunflower Electric Power Corp. to build two or three coal-fired plants outside Holcomb, in southwest Kansas. The department has yet to decide whether to grant Sunflower a needed air-quality permit, but a draft permit did not regulate CO2.

The Deans filed their lawsuit May 17 in Shawnee County District Court, naming the department as the sole defendant. No hearings have been scheduled.

"Ultimately, it's a question: Do you want to do the right thing?" Raymond Dean said during a telephone interview Wednesday. "It's pretty crummy that we're making pollution for states back East, and they're working hard to do the right thing."

Sunflower's plans have put it at the center of the ongoing national debate about global warming, and they have drawn criticism from environmentalists and from officials in other states, including California and New York.

Nationwide, utilities are building or seeking permits for 94 coal-fired projects and have plans for up to 65 more, according to Global Energy Decisions, a Boulder, Colo., consulting firm.

Gov. Kathleen Sebelius has said she wants the state to rely less on coal-fired plants for its electricity, but she also has said it doesn't make sense to block Sunflower's plans, only to see its plants built just across the state line.

Sebelius spokeswoman Nicole Corcoran declined to comment on the lawsuit.

"The governor has said that we need to look for alternatives to coal — with the understanding that it will always be relied upon, but we'd like to decrease the reliance by increasing other alternatives."

Yvonne Anderson, KDHE's chief legal counsel, said the agency will file a request to have the lawsuit dismissed. She said states operate "trickle down" regulatory programs, putting programs into effect after they've received mandates from the federal government. The U.S. Supreme Court's ruling will require the federal government to act, she said, not states.

She noted that Kansas recently joined 29 other states in an effort to track greenhouse gas emissions.

"We're not recalcitrant," she said. "We're not opposed. It's just premature. We need that research. We need the federal regs in place."

Sunflower has said repeatedly that its new plants will use new technology to prevent them from increasing emissions of regulated pollutants and that the utility will abide by whatever future standards federal or state officials impose.

Steve Miller, the utility's spokesman, said the lawsuit is "between the agency and the Deans." But he added it would be better for the federal government to deal with regulating carbon dioxide because it's a worldwide issue.

"I wouldn't think it would be in Kansans' interest to impose rules on Kansans that are not imposed on the rest of the people in the United States," Miller said.
