Bride-to-be overwhelmed with wedding choices

BY DR. JOYCE BROTHERS
Dear Dr. Brothers: I'm in the process of planning my wedding right now, and I'm getting very unhappy about all the decision-making and planning I have to do. I may have underestimated the amount of work it takes to put on a large wedding, but I feel overwhelmed and more stressed than I expected, even when it comes to small decisions that are relatively unimportant in the long run. Is this normal, or is my freaking out a sign that something is terribly wrong? -- Z.B.

Dear Z.B.: Large weddings do take a huge amount of time and a large energy commitment, and it can begin to feel like a burden at times, especially when you're trying to balance your social life. So, overall, your stress and unhappiness are very normal, and in all likelihood are due to the extra pressure you're under to throw a great party for your wedding.

You mention that making even small decisions has been a source of stress in these planning stages. Interestingly, a study recently was published in the Journal of Personality and Social Psychology that shows that feelings of stress and mental exhaustion can be brought on by having to make too many decisions. While having options is usually thought of as a good thing, it turns out that people faced with many choices -- even when they are choosing between good options -- can find it hard to stay focused and complete even simple tasks. So, the stress you are feeling might be due to the overwhelming numbers of small decisions you are making daily in preparation for the wedding, not to anything wrong with your soon-to-be marriage.

Dear Dr. Brothers: My husband really wants children, and I really don't. I know this is something we should have discussed before we got married, but at the time, both of us were unsure of how we felt about kids, and now we've both come to separate conclusions. We really love each other, but this seems like an insurmountable obstacle. What should we do? -- J.S.

Dear J.S.: This does seem like an insurmountable obstacle, but it doesn't have to be. First, you have to each figure out your own priorities and reasons for your feelings about children. You have to decide whether you prioritize your marriage above your desire to not have children, and your husband has to do the same.
