This is a logic-based number placement puzzle. The goal is to enter a number, 1-9, in each cell in which each row, column and 3x3 region must contain only one instance of each numeral. The solution to today's Sudoku puzzle is below.

Jealous husband; lover gone

Dear Dr. Brothers: After a bad first marriage, I tried it again, and this time I married a younger man, whom I love a lot. I thought, This time, at least he won't be jealous. It's supposed to be the older woman who's guilty of jealousy. Not so, in my case. He's suspicious of every guy who looks in my direction -- and a lot do, partly because of my profession. It means nothing. I want the man I have and intend to keep, but what is his problem? -- C.C.

Dear C.C.: Jealousy is often closely related to low self-esteem in both sexes, although this particular type of jealousy is rarer in a man. Because of a female's role in society, it's more likely to be the wife who invests her whole sense of identity, her self-respect and her self-image in her husband.

In your case, partly because of your success in your career, he may feel basically insecure, that he can in no way expect to compete with the other males around him. A man who's secure within himself would be confident enough to know that he doesn't even have to try to do this.

Men who believe in traditional gender roles for men and women -- in which it's the male who's more successful, the woman less so and more servient -- is much more likely to be excessively jealous, especially when he has a wife, such as you, who doesn't exactly fit this limited description of male-female roles. Try to reassure him and, if possible, make him feel better about himself.

Dear Dr. Brothers: It's taken me almost six months to get over a serious romantic breakup with a man I believed I was with for life. I just figured him to be one of those who's allergic to marriage, but no more. I thought he was faithful, but now it doesn't matter. He left me for a younger -- much younger -- woman after seven years. I have a good profession and my own money, but I've always wanted to marry. Now I'm beginning to realize that at my age (39), it's almost impossible. I'm still angry and more depressed every time I look at myself in the mirror and realize I'm no longer young. -- D.G.

Dear D.G.: It sounds to me as if you need to take another look, and begin to think of ways to highlight and make the best of all your good features. If you've put on extra weight because of your despair, if you stopped going to your health club and buried all thought of a diet, make a list of all the ways to return to a health schedule that will help you regain your self-confidence. Use some rewards to give you a push in the right direction. Check out some new clothes, visit your hairdresser and let him or her suggest a few things. Beauty, how someone appears to others, depends largely upon how that person thinks of herself, and on her frame of mind.

It might interest you to know that a recent study showed that a 40-year-old single woman has a better than 40 percent chance of marrying. It seems those grim predictions of the past no longer apply.
