Disease lab heads to Kansas

MANHATTAN (AP) – Sen. Sam Brownback says a federal animal research program headed to Kansas will attract private businesses seeking to take advantage of that research.

the language, because they were from bigger schools, and had the opportunity to hear other languages. Then when classes were over, we did all the tourist things.'

She said that although her group didn't always know where they were, they knew how to get back to where they started by recognizing the same kinds of writing in what they thought to be directions, and they never felt like they might be lost.

"If we were where we felt it might be the wrong place, we'd just turn around and go another direction," she added.

She said the train station the day is the largest in the world, and in droves. there were people going everywhere. "There are no street signs in Tokyo," Gerstner said, "so we had to go by landmarks. It was a lot of fun, and we felt safe the whole time. We didn't see or hear of any crime, and the only thing we saw that would resemble anything wrong was that we saw one drunk."

Her favorite place to go in Tokyo was Shibuya, where mostly young people go. They go there to shop, to do business and to mingle, she said.

Shibuya has the largest crosswalk in the world, she said, where the stop lights all turn red at once, group commuted through every and people cross over the streets

"I don't think I saw one foreigner in all those people," she said. "They were all Japanese... at least they looked like they were."

Gerstner said her host parents for the first month were very liberal with her. They let her go to school by herself, and she had to be home at a certain time, but it wasn't unreasonable. The wife was a stay-at-home mom, and the father was a computer company executive with Sony.

The couple has two daughters, 10 and 18, and they spoke no English. She said she saw very little of them because they were always in school.

Her host family for the second month consisted of a stay at home mom and a banker dad. There were also two host sisters, 11 and 16.

She said the 16-year-old was either at school, studying, or playing sports, because she played sports seven days a week. It is nothing for Gerstner to experience kids coming and going, since she is one of four kids in her family.

Gerstner said she attended school with the 11-year-old quite a lot of the time, where she joined in with the dance team. She said they did a traditional Japanese dance, and even performed in front of 5,000 people at one event.

"I was the tallest one there, musical, "Peter Pan."

that's for sure," she said with a laugh.

"The food was awesome," she said, "and there was salad and rice at every meal. It was nothing for supper to be what you'd have for breakfast the next day, and salad for breakfast wasn't actually that bad. There were different plates for every food item, and that suited me fine because I don't like for my food to touch.

"I never ever cared for veggies much, but theirs were awesome, because of the way they are cooked. I felt like I was eating less, but actually wasn't."

Gerstner said her hosts had informal tea ceremonies, and she felt like she was the stupid American who did it all wrong.

"The Japanese are right-hand dominant," she said, "and I'm left hand dominant, and when they tried to show me something, I couldn't get it right. I do feel like a pro at chop sticks, though. And now I know why they slurp their noodles, because the noodles are long and you'd never get them in your mouth if you didn't slurp!"

Labo is the Japanese word for 4-H, Gerstner said. The Labo presents productions in English, to make it easier to learn the language. She said she enjoyed being chosen to be the interpreter for the

She also attended a Labo camp but thought it was strange because it was held indoors. She said she also thought it was odd that they sang Christmas songs at the Labo > camp. Gerstner said she was the center of attraction much of the time for the younger Japanese kids.

> She went to movies while there and said Japanese movie theaters are huge. She said it was funny to see American movies in English with Japanese subtitles.

> She also said the Japanese have more electronic gadgets than she has ever seen, and she thought the Japanese cars were strange with the steering wheel on the opposite side from American designs.

> She said the temperature there in June and July wasn't any hotter than here, but she thought the humidity was very high.

More travel is a definite in her plans for the future, Gerstner said.

She wants to attend the University of Kansas after high school, and pursue a career in anesthesiology. She said she would like to do some studying abroad and you can bet that before settling in one spot, she will definitely make more memories from outside the United States.

Japanese student experiences America day begins early, usually at 5 a.m. She studies for two hours and then heads for school. After school, she practices from 4 to 6 p.m. with her swim club, then arrives home around 6:30, where she said she studies again until 10 p.m.

"I go to bed early and get up early," she said, "and we don't hang out with friends in my home town, because we all go home and study."

Yokoyama said she has no brothers or sisters, and no cousins, and is amazed that her host father is one of eight children. Families in Japan average one to two, she said.

She said her parents divorced when she was 3, and she has little contact with her father. Her mother, who attended Ohio State University for one year as an AFS student, is an editor for children's picture books.

"America is very fashionable," she said, "and I thought I would be able to buy cute clothes, but I am surprised there are not many shops here.'

Yokovama said she loves American food, especially hamburgers and french fries. She likes pizza, too, but said before coming to America, she had eaten pizza just three times.
