Trego attorney resigns post

WaKEENY (AP) — Trego County Attorney Jill Elliott has resigned after five months on the job. Elliott says her resignation takes effect Nov. 24. She said the job demanded more time than her private practice allowed.

Elliott, who practices law in Hill City, was named to replace outgoing county attorney David Basgall, who resigned after being diagnosed with multiple sclerosis.

Trego County Clerk Lori Augustine says she will notify county Democrats, who then have 21 days to convene a convention to appoint a new county attorney.

The county's five precinct committeemen will make the decision on who will get the position.

Municipal Airport. Armstrong said the council felt allowing Davis to rent office space would put the city in competition with private enterprise. She said they would rather allow an airport-related business to rent space at the airport.

"The airport terminal was built with Federal Aviation Administration money, and it was meant for aviation purposes," Armstrong said.

- Set a public hearing at 7:30 p.m. on Tuesday, Dec. 1, on increasing the 2009 Sewer Fund budget by $733,035. The money will cover the final construction costs, additional utilities and operating supplies for the new Wastewater Treatment Plant east of town. It will also pay for insurance on the new facility and a third employee.
- Heard Armstrong report on a meeting with area representatives and state Department of Transportation officials from Topeka about Colby eventually needing a turn lane on Country Club Drive at Willow Avenue to serve the Bosselman's Travel Center. She said she was told there was no money available for the project. Armstrong said the turn lane is needed for safety reasons and because the large number semitrailer trucks constantly moving through the area slows the flow of traffic.

- Approved Mayor Ken Bieber's appointment of Richard Snider to the Colby Board of Zoning Appeals. He will fill the unexpired term of Doug Lewis, which ends in April 2012. Mr. Lewis is moving to the Colby/Thomas County Metropolitan Area Planning Commission.
- Heard that the contractor, Young Brothers, is almost finished with the exterior of the fire bay connected to the city hall building. Glenn Strait of Strait and Associates said the exterior will need additional roof support. Armstrong said once Larry Oren of L&M Steel gets the columns and braces done, the city crew will finish the interior and she will get bids for roof and guttering work. She said concrete work will eventually be needed on the south side of the bay. The remaining bay will be used a storage area for Santa City items and other materials, said Armstrong.
- Learned the door on the west between City Hall and the basement area is being replaced with a metal door for security reasons. Armstrong said the east side of the building where a door was replaced years ago needs to be repaired.

State may feel budget pinch again are dominated by sound bites and slogans but we have an opportunity to change this."

Legislators said they realize it's going to hurt schools and may affect student achievement, but there are just not any good options. Tax increases aren't a good idea and won't help soon enough.

"The revenue forecast is a sobering reflection on the pain many Kansas families are feeling," said House Appropriations Committee Chairman Kevin Yoder, an Overland Park Republican. "Kansas government is not immune from the national economic climate. We are expected to ratchet down spending and do more with less."

Schools have fared well this decade following a landmark Kansas Supreme Court ruling that prompted an increase of nearly $1 billion in new state dollars for schools. The money was targeted at students who struggle with poverty and are at risk of failure.

But those financial gains have eroded as the state's financial health has faded. Deeper cuts were prevented in part because of federal stimulus dollars meant to shore up spending. That money runs out next year, meaning absent a revenue rebound, cuts will be unavoidable.

Sen. Jay Emler, chairman of the Ways and Means Committee, said school officials and government reports have suggested that there are areas that could be eliminated that would save districts time and money without hurting the classroom. Emler said he'd take all suggestions come January as his committee works the state budget.

"We need the information to come from the ground up," said Emler, a Lindsborg Republican. "I've spoken to school superintendents who say there will be considerable pressure to look at consolidation. But they also say they may not be able to do it politically at the local level."

School advocates say they have warned districts this might happen. Those who may have ignored the signs soon will have to face reality.

Mark Tallman, spokesman for the Kansas Association of School Boards, said the fear that districts have is that they have looked for areas to cut, but many are federally mandated.

"The problem is what we've added in terms of funding in recent years that's now at risk was put in to drive student achievement," Tallman said. "Unfortunately, if we have to reduce dollars, that's where it's going to come back out of."

Sparing education from any cuts isn't realistic, Emler said. The money could come from public safety, for example, but it would take closing prisons, eliminating the highway patrol and cutting the adjutant general's office to get those kinds of savings.
