Governor may offset state budget with tax hikes

From "TAXES," Page 1

Seth Bundy said last week. A sour national economy and lower-thanexpected tax collections in Kansas have led this year to five rounds of budget adjustments.

In the current budget, as revised, the state's general tax revenues will cover about $5.35 billion in spending. That's almost 12 percent less than in the previous fiscal year, but the state is using federal money to close much of that gap.

Before Parkinson's actions in November, the state had $276 million in stimulus money available to plug into the budget in fiscal 2011, which begins July 1. Now, there's $190 million left.

State officials predict Kansas tax collections will drop next year by about 3 percent, to less than $5.2 billion, giving legislators another projected deficit to tackle.

Some GOP leaders argue there's little reason to postpone budget cuts because the state's financial problems are likely to message to legislators and others by using and Parkinson's secretary of revenue linger. Tapping stimulus dollars now - or stimulus dollars to avoid deeper cuts in fiseven in 2011 — only postpones some tough cal 2010. The $86 million will supplant state tax breaks granted over the past 15 years. decisions, they say.

"You pay the piper at some point," said Senate Ways and Means Committee Chairman Jay Emler, a Lindsborg Republican.

But Parkinson's statements in announcing the latest round of adjustments last month suggest where his administration is headed. Even as he trimmed spending, he decried the effects of what he was doing.

He said social-service programs faced potentially "crippling" cuts and that public school classes would get larger. He said supervision of former prison inmates would become more lax and roads would be less well maintained.

"He now has a straw man to go to the public and say, 'I made all these cuts, now let's increase taxes," said House Appropriations Committee Chairman Kevin Yoder, an Overland Park Republican.

dollars for general aid to public schools, but leave less for schools next fiscal year.

Before this year, the state had been ratcheting up spending on public schools, a response to a state Supreme Court ruling in lawsuit filed by school districts.

The state's base aid rose $570 per student, nearly 15 percent, from the 2004-05 school year to 2008-09. At the start of 2009, it was $4,433 per student.

Now, even with the stimulus funds, it's dropped back down to $4,012 - down $421 per student, or nearly 10 percent off its high point.

And State Budget Director Duane Goossen said: "We're operating from the presumption that this is as deep as we should go.'

Goossen didn't say specifically that the next year. same presumption carries forward into the Parkinson's administration also sent a next fiscal year, but fellow Democrats - have been passing out charts about various

The charts show that these tax breaks will cost the state $869 million in general revenues in fiscal 2010. The figure even takes into consideration tax increases approved in 2002 to help close a budget gap that year.

In 2002, Gov. Bill Graves used similar charts in pushing for an increase. The message was the same as it is this year: The state was generous in the past and now needs to take a small part of them back so it won't cripple schools and programs.

Of course, plenty of legislators, particularly Republicans, disagree. they worry that any revenue-raising measures might hamper an already slow economic recovery.

But Parkinson's administration still is drifting toward proposing some increases

Medical Center struggles to cope with cuts

KANSAS CITY, Kan. (AP) on the effort to achieve National to other sources of money. - At the University of Kansas Cancer Institute designation. Medical Center, state budget cuts are forcing enrollment cuts, hampering an effort to obtain National Cancer Institute designation and causing even more staff reductions.

Only about 2,400 students pay tuition on the Medical Center campus, leaving its budget much more reliant on state funding than other regents institutions.

And yet, when it comes to allocating state cuts over the past year and a half, the medical center has had to absorb pretty much the same hits as other universities.

Ed Phillips, vice chancellor for administration, said the center lost $14.4 million in state money since the entire combined budgets for the School of Nursing and the School of Allied Health.

Nearly 70 percent of the center's state revenue and tuition dollars are tied up in payroll, Phillips said.

issues. But, he said, there's still "a good deal of anxiety" about raising taxes in a difficult economic climate.

"When the Legislature began looking at budget cuts, I was July 2008. That's about equal to concerned that we would start impacting some real vital investments that the state has made, and certainly the Cancer Center is one of those programs that we want to see succeed in the future," Davis said.
