but the only expectation that matters is the one you have for yourself.

Waites also spoke about choices.

"There are a lot of choices. We cannot control what others think. We can control what we do," he said.

His advice to the graduating class was to focus on what they wanted, not what others expected of them.

"Do what you truly want to do. Hang in there, even in tough times, and there will be tough times. Make the most of your future."

The inmates all expressed an interest in either continuing their education or in starting their own business after release. The nine graduates included: Mickey Owens, Anthony Perkins, Jonathon Scranton, Patrick McGraw, Dan McCall, Alford Granger, Jeremy Fisher, Brian Holmes and Jordan Henson.

"The college course gave me the chance to think differently and look forward to something outside the fence," Granger said.

McCall said he wants to open a business after release and said the class prepared him for that possibility.

Christiane Cole was one of the instructors for the course. Classes included business communication, keyboarding, Quickbooks, practical office and customer relations.

Perkins said he wasn't aware of some of the computer programs before, especially Quickbooks.

"It was challenging. A few of them I didn't even know existed, but I think it's something I'll use," Perkins said.

"It gave me the opportunity to re-navigate my computer skills. It will help me with powerpoint presentations," Holmes said.

Tuesday was a special day for one inmate in particular with Scranton celebrating his 24th birthday and completing the program. He said the business skills he learned will help him in the job market after he is released.

"All of it is necessary these days," he said.

For some of the inmates, the chance to further themselves made a difference.

"I'm going to use this to continue my degree. This is a corrections facility, but there are few opportunities for improvement. I think it's awesome that they do this," said Jeremy Fisher.

"It's nice to have people come in who see us as people, not people who have made mistakes," Perkins said.

Colby Community College, Norton Correctional Facility and Kansas Works partnered for the program, which will end in July when the third class will graduate. The first class graduated Jan 29.
