Fatality review board releases 2009 domestic violence report

The Governor's Domestic Violence Fatality Review Board has released the findings from its 2009 Annual Report and announced recent member appointments made by the governor.

"In our efforts to keep Kansans safe, it is critical that we not only protect the victims of domestic violence but continue to work toward preventing future crimes from occurring," said Parkinson. "I appreciate the board's continued efforts in focusing on the issue of domestic violence fatalities and tackling its root causes to prevent future victims."

In 2009, the board reviewed five fatality cases that occurred in 2005. The report also includes a summary of the 22 cases it has reviewed since its inception.

"Whether it be through more meaningful laws, adequate funding for programs or increased awareness in the community, our ultimate goal is to rid our society of domestic violence," said Chairman Robert T. Stephan, a former Kansas attorney general. Items made by the board in the report include:

- Encouraging domestic violence programs to offer victims a full range of services, develop collaboration to advocate with other service providers and address victims' needs with Kansas courts.
- Encouraging court services, corrections and parole officers to develop supervision policies and procedures that hold domestic violence offenders accountable and help promote victim safety.
- Requiring health-care providers, including home providers, be trained to screen for domestic violence, intervene when required and provide referrals to community organizations.

• Encouraging law enforcement agencies to review and revise policies to ensure thorough investigation of domestic violence incidents.

Adopting a Kansas law regarding strangulation through a separate criminal statute or by including strangulation in the definition of "great bodily harm" in aggravated battery or other appropriate section.

The report also highlighted progress made on past recommendations, including domestic violence legislation, which the Legislature passed and Gov. Parkinson signed into law earlier this year. The new law tracks offenders by placing a domestic violence designation on these cases.

To help the board review and make future recommendations, the governor has made four recent appointments, Joyce Grover, Deborah Moody and Libby Scott, Lawrence and Leigh Liggett, Kansas City.

The board is charged with reviewing all adult domestic violence-related fatalities and describing trends and patterns regarding the facts and circumstances. It then recommends ways to prevent future fatalities and determines if adequate resources and training are in place for those who respond to these crimes.

Man shot in head, notices years later

BERLIN (AP) — Police say a man living in Germany was shot in the back of his head, but that it took him five years to realize it.

Police said Tuesday that the 35-year-old man was hit by a .22-caliber bullet in the western town of Herne as he was out in the street partying and drunk on New Year's Eve five years ago. They say the man recalled receiving a blow to the head, but told them he didn't seek medical assistance at the time.

The bullet did not penetrate the skull, and police say the Polish man only went to see a doctor recently when he felt a lump on the back of his head. An X-ray showed an object under his skin, and doctors operated and found the bullet.

Police say it may have been a stray bullet fired by a reveler in celebration.

New staff, students come to Golden Plains

With school gearing up at Golden Plains, several new students and staff members can be seen in the halls, though Superintendent Mary Ellen Welshon predicts that final enrollment numbers will be about the same as last year.

Class sizes range from 11 to 25, including two preschool classes of 14 three-year-olds and 15 four-year-olds, a program the school has had for about 13 years.

Golden Plains High School has a total enrollment of 74 students, though that number is not yet official.

"We are glad to have each and every one of our students here at Golden Plains High School," said Administrative Assistant Travis Smith.

This echoes the words of Welshon, who emphasizes that the mission of the district is not to "all children" but to "each child," helping individuals to reach their potential.

Transfer students include three in the grade school, three in the middle school, and seven in the high school. Several were formerly enrolled in the Colby district, and seem to share a preference for being in a smaller school. One former student at Heartland has the opposite reasoning, however, enjoying the larger student body.

New students at the high school include, besides those from Colby, two from Denver, one from Loveland, Colo., and one from Triplains in Winona.

Five new staff members have joined the district:

• Former Golden Plains math teacher Dena Dellere has returned as high school math teacher and PowerSchool administrator. She taught there during the 1996-1997 term. After living in Andover for several years, she has moved back to their farm northwest of Selden along with her husband Wayne and son Killian. She also has two grown daughters. Along with teaching, she has a wide range of experience in technology positions.

• Mindy Fleckenstein, a 2002 graduate, has returned to teach high school science. She lives in Jennings with her husband Eric and daughters Taryn and Jordyn. She has taught at Norton Community High School the past five years.

• Terry Preston, a 1984 alumnus, is also a returning staff member. He coached middle school basketball from 2002-2004. This season, he will be the head boys' basketball coach. He lives on a farm near Selden and has two sons, T.J. and Tate.

• Paul Nieman, has joined the staff as a route bus driver. Nieman, who lives in Gem, also has ties to Golden Plains, as his daughter Julie Ziegelmeier teaches fifth grade and daughter Mindy Christensen teaches first grade. He also has three sons.

• Lance Howard comes to Golden Plains as an interrelated teacher at the elementary school. He lives in Oakley with his family, Kim, Corey, Jessie, and Logan. He worked at Hill City the last two years and at Oakley High School before that.

Several staff members have changed positions as well.

"These highly trained individuals and position changes are a great addition to our highly qualified staff," Superintendent Welshon said. "We look forward to continuing to provide each of our students with a high quality education in a positive school environment."

Women, minorities, novices sought for farm programs

The U.S. Farm Service Agency says it's reaching out to women and minority farmers in Kansas in an effort to get more of them involved in its farm programs.

"We're in the business of helping our farmers and ranchers - all of them," said Adrian J. Polansky, state executive director for the agency. "Our programs are generally well known throughout the ag community ... but there may be producers, especially among women, minority, beginning and limited-resource farmers, who still are not aware of our programs and the benefits that may be available to them."

"We want to reach those producers and tell them the Farm Service Agency is here for them, too."

Polansky said that while Department of Agriculture programs remain available to all farmers, "We want to increase participation by traditionally underrepresented groups. We want to see more women and minorities take advantage of these programs."

These programs include farm, youth and emergency loans, the Emergency Conservation Program, the Conservation Reserve Program and the related Transition Incentive Program, the Direct and Counter-Cyclical Program and Average Crop Revenue Election, and marketing assistance and farm storage facility loans.

Applicants must meet the eligibility requirements for a program before the agency can extend benefits, he said. For information, contact the Farm Service county office at 462-7671 or go to www.fsa.usda.gov/ks.
