jobs. Government employment was 8,300 higher in August than in August 2009.

Last year, the state had multiple rounds of spending cuts to keep its budget balanced. This year, legislators increased the state's sales tax to prevent further reductions.

It's too early to tell how much effect the sales tax increase had on state government employment, said

Department of Labor economist Tyler Tenbrink. A small part of the bump can be attributed to temporary it not been for a 3.5 percent increase in government census jobs for the federal government's once-adecade count of the population, and Tenbrink noted that August sees the annual summer layoffs of graduate students employed by state colleges.

Meanwhile, manufacturing employment was slightly lower in August than in August 2009, with 1,200 fewer jobs, a decline of 0.7 percent. Other sectors saw over-the-year declines as well.
