said.

Gov. Sam Brownback toured the region on Wednesday, surveying the damage and talking to residents about the impact. He has asked the U.S. Department of Agriculture to declare 21 counties a disaster zone, which could trigger some assistance.

"Growing up on a farm and serving as the state's agriculture secretary, this is worse than previous droughts I've seen in a lifetime of agriculture," Brownback said. "It will take a great deal of time and rain to reverse the impact of this drought."

Neufeld said it would take several years for the soils to recover from the drought to return to plentiful harvests. A more immediate impact is the loss of bridges on a short line railroad that is causing problems in delivering grain and other goods to the region.

While the wheat crop is shot, some farmers may not even try another crop this spring, he said, extending the impact.

"It has a longer tail than most people realize because not only is it affecting the wheat crop, people are already turning in their spring seed," Neufeld said. "People aren't going to plant them because there's not enough subsoil moisture."

Legislative leaders say the balance, saying they want to prodrought's full effects won't be tect essential state services from known for some time, but it is being harmed. likely to be felt in state revenue collections.

from the recession, but a slump in the agriculture economy could blunt the recovery and force further cuts in state services.

A report for the week ending May 1 rated 45 percent of the Kansas wheat crop at poor or very poor condition. Only 2 percent of all wheat planted was rated excellent.

Many fear the drought will have an impact even after the rains finally return.

"We need to be mindful of the revenue stream, and the expense stream. There may be additional costs the state has to pay as a result of the downturn," said House Minority Leader Paul Davis, a Lawrence Democrat. "I think it's something we need to be thinking about."

Legislators are working with a thin margin in drafting the 2012 budget. The final product will total close to $14 billion and cut between 5 percent and 6 percent in overall spending compared to the 2011 budget. Those reductions include trimming state aid to public schools and other state programs.

The House is seeking a budget that has an ending balance of between $50 million and $100 million through June 30, 2012, based on the April 15 revenue forecast for the coming year. Senators haven't set a floor for an ending ing business and that in turn will quickly begin to impact local businesses and communities," Brown-
