Davis' execution had been halted three times since 2007. The U.S. Supreme Court even gave Davis an unusual opportunity to "clearly establish" his innocence in a lower court last year. But didn't meet that standard – a higher bar than is set for prosecutors in proving guilt. While the nation's top court didn't hear the case, they did set a tough standard for Davis to exonerate himself, ruling that his attorneys must "clearly establish" Davis' innocence – a higher bar to meet hearing, a lower court judge ruled in prosecutors' favor, and the justices didn't take up the case.
