Applebury said she is not in favor of the program, but if the commissioners offer the incentives, a lot of homework and research on the program's structure needs to be done beforehand.

Cech said she doesn't understand the difference between this program and the Thomas County Economic Development Alliance office that is already in existence. If they offer the same opportunities, she doesn't believe a duplication of service is the best route for the county to Harms noted that the development director was supposed to be present at the meeting to help explain any differences and similarities, but rescheduled was not planning to attend. The issue will tentatively resume on Monday, April 9.

In other business:

• Commissioners approved a resolution encouraging Gov. Sam Brownback to carefully and health-care provisions for day that someone had stolen the people with intellectual and developmental disabilities and to remove long-term care services for persons with disabilities from a proposed managed-care said.

• Dale Owings from Penco, the engineer working on the Mc-Carty Dairy road project, said the job, which started last Tuesday, is going well but they've hit one minor problem.

The dairy paid for some concrete that leads from a scale building on the property to the main road. Their concrete work was done about a month ago and the last bit of it extends into the road area, overlapping Penco's plans. It is a couple inches higher than the road will be, Owings said, but that it is better than being too low, so drainage should not be an issue.

Instead of having the owners tear the section out, about $2,000 to $3,000 worth of consince Commissioner Paul Steele to leave it. Since it was poured about a month ago, the coloration will be different and they will have to do some work in order to level out the two heights, the engineer said.

- Schrock received approval from the commissioners to replace the tracks of a dozer. It will cost about $15,200 for a new set, he said.
- Clerk Harms reported that two vacant offices at the Thomas County Office Complex, 350 S. Range, have been rented. A small office across the hall from Shirley Weber's office with the Local Environmental Protection Program will be used by Kansas Works, the state employment office. That office will be open two days a week.

The other office will be used by Jordan Sharp, a representative for Aflac insurance. He is renting the former American Red Cross office.
