ing the annual event. After the business portion of the meeting, three grant recipients expressed their thanks to the foundation and explained how the grants they received have impacted their programs.

Thomas County Health Department Director Kasiah Rothchild, member of the Thomas County Coalition, explained that the foundation has provided oversight and has managed funds for Colby's Walking Trails. With help from the foundation, Rothchild said the trails and the coalition's efforts have gained national recognition as a success story, which has been presented at conferences statewide.

"We have a great working relationship with the foundation," said Rothchild. "They have a community-minded director and board that cares about Colby and Thomas County."

Rothchild said that because of the funds established at the foundation, people have seen the need to contribute to the Walking Trails and followed suit to donate.

However, she said an additional $65,000 is still needed to complete the 2.2 miles of trails, which needs to be finished as a stipulation to receive $35,000 from the Sunflower Foundation. Next, six young women from the Victory House Christian Academy in Brewster presented a memorized skit explaining what the academy is and how it has helped them overcome their personal struggles. They also gave a performance, using sign language to convey the lyrics to a song, which touched many of the audience members.

During their program, the
