Auctioning cow portrait

KAYLA CORNETT/Colby Free Press

A board member of Hospice Services Inc. held up a live-auction item Nov. 10 at the group's dinner, auction and dance at the City Limits Convention Center. The piece, a portrait of a cow on canvas, was created by Diane Whitehead and donated by Inlow Interiors.

a budget." Brown said she is looking forward to showcasing her home, which was built in the early 1900s. She said much of her home will be decorated with time-period pieces and each room will have a different theme.

"For example, my son's room will have a hunting, outdoorsy theme," she said, "and my daughter's room will look like an old-fashioned child's room, with old toys that my husband played with as a boy. I've got wonderful friends and family who are helping me room by room."

Vacik said her excited nerves are spearheading plans to not only decorate the inside of her home, but have also motivated efforts to dress up her porch and yard with garlands and Christmas trees.

"I'll be displaying some ceramics and nativity scenes made by my grandmother, my mother and myself," she said. "The pieces are family heirlooms that are very special to us, especially the ones that my grandmother painted. She passed away a few years ago, so they are very sentimental to me."

ing is that first-class mail will continue to move overnight, at least if it makes the right truck to North Platte.

Publications might take longer to deliver, he said, two to nine days instead of one to nine, but overnight first-class mail between area codes starting with 677 will be unaffected.

"First-class mail is our bread and butter, it's what pays the bills," Sperry said, adding that first-class volume declined by 5 percent last year and is projected to decline 47 percent by 2020.

To offset losses suffered from the rise of digital mail, the post office wants to consolidate 140 processing operations nationwide next year.

The list was released quietly after 6 p.m. Friday, but the press has paid little attention.

Sperry said that last fiscal year, the service lost $15.9 billion and it hopes to save $1.2 billion through the consolidations.

the 1930s and 1940s, connecting this to a broader history of Middle Eastern states controlling religious communities' access to radio and television, and the complications engendered by the satellite phenomenon that started in the late 1990s.

Stanton earned her doctorate from Columbia University. She has taught at Sarah Lawrence College and the American University of Beirut.

She has worked at the New York University Center for Dialogues, an academic-, policy- and community-focused institute that promotes "sustainable engagement" with Muslim communities in the United States and abroad.

Diseases lead to Kansas deer deaths

LAWRENCE (AP) - Deer herds are a little thinner in a couple of Kansas counties because of a seasonal virus that might be worse than normal because of the summer's drought.

The Lawrence Journal-World reports dozens of dead deer have been found near lakes and ponds in Douglas and Franklin counties. A spokesman for the Kansas Department of Wildlife, Parks and Tourism says about 400 deer deaths from epizootic hemorrhagic disease have been reported.

Wildlife and disease coordinator Shane Hesting says the disease has affected only a small portion of a total deer population that exceeds half a million.
