The second charge, of aggravated battery for injuring Campwas also upheld.

tery wasn't aggravated because there was no proof that Coryell intended to commit a felony by imposing "serious bodily harm" to Campbell, to which Romine said that if Coryell had the time – between lifting the gun and pulling the trigger – to premeditate Cook's murder, then it would follow suit that he did so knowing it would also hurt Campbell.

Again, the judge agreed, leaving the charge up to the jury.

burglary – which again, requires intent to commit a felony as Judge Pratt agreed with her, part of the charge – should be and the charge remained for the dropped. First, he said, Coryell and his friend, Everett Urban, had been invited to the home by the text messages. Second, bell as she lay in bed with Cook, when the men drove to the house, there was no proof that Barrett argued that the bat- they were looking for anything more than a fist fight. Third, Cook was staying at Ryan McEvoy's house north of Jennings, where the shooting happened, as a tenant, exchanging goods and services in exchange for staying at the house for the weeks that he was home on leave. As a tenant, he had the authority to invite people into the home. And fourth, Barrett argued, when the men first arrived, they talked to Dakota Cook, Corey's brother, who was also staying there, and The other requests to dismiss he never told them to leave. Da-

Romine argued that because the men entered the home with the men initially parked at the intent to commit a felony – in end of the drive (on a county this case, causing "great bodily road) to avoid trespassing (as harm" to Campbell. But there Urban testified) and the fact that was no evidence that they entered the home with any weapthey knocked on the door before entering both showed that they ons other than their fists, and knew they weren't supposed there was no evidence that they to enter the home. The screen intended to cause great bodily door was closed, she said, a "No harm to Campbell. They in-Trespassing" sign was posted tended to cause bodily harm outside, it had been 30 minutes to Cook, yes, but there was no since they had last received any proof that they entered the home communication from Cook and in order to go after her. when they arrived, everyone was asleep. This undoubtedly charge of aggravated burglary showed that they knew they would be dismissed, as was the weren't supposed to be there, alternative charge (to premedishe argued. tated murder) of felony murder, because that would only apply if

"They drove 15 minutes after getting a hold of no one and still Coryell had killed Cook while decided to enter the house for a intending to commit a felony three-on-one fight," she said.

But this time, Judge Pratt disagreed.

she had told Coryell when Cook dumped her, but couldn't remember if she told him that he took her back.

Campbell said that she was tipsy that night, but knew that Cook was drunk when he began dancing on a table.

Jordan Urban, who had dated Cook for a few years before marrying Everett Urban, said she at first encouraged the relationship between Campbell and Cook, but then started to discourage it. Texts between the Urbans, Cook, Campbell and Coryell would later culminate in Cook's death.

"She (Urban) started saying that she knew how he (Cook) treated people he loved," Campbell testified. Jordan Urban started acting jealous, she said, perhaps because Cook was her ex. Neither Jordan Urban nor Cook told her that they still talked to each other frequently, she added.

Three simultaneous text conversations were happening at once from about 7:30 p.m. up until the murder, about 1:30 a.m., transcripts entered into evidence showed: one between Campbell and Coryell, one between Everett Urban and Cook and the third between Jordan Urban and Cook. Coryell himself only sent Cook two messages.

The text messages

First, Coryell and Campbell: This conversation was either that of a spurned lover and his love (according to the prosecution) or that of a guy who's had enough of some girl (according to the defense). They range from "Don't talk to me again," (from Campbell) to "Sorry I wasn't good enough for you," from Coryell.

He said, "I would have done anything for will hurt me if you do something to Corey." This text, she said, was prompted because she assumed they would fight. In fact, at this point, everyone seemed to be assuming there would be a fight. were text-arguing about Jordan Urban, who been drinking or how long they'd been revealing and most unclear.

a long-standing feud, and on this everyone agreed: They did not like each other at all, with Cook going so far as to taunt Everett about a failed suicide attempt where he tried to shoot himself.

Many witnesses testified to hearing the story of how Cook said he would leave a shotgun in Everett's truck for him with a note saying, "This time don't miss."

The third conversation, between Jordan Urban and Cook, started out lighter - they admitted keeping in regular touch with each other – but quickly devolved into the same bickering, name-calling and insults.

Soon, a fight was challenged, and Coryell ioined Everett and others who were going out to a place called the "hog units," where the guys could duke it out.

Coryell and friends arrived there, but Cook never showed up.

The group went back to their party, but the texts kept coming and going. Coryell's only text messages to Cook said first, that Campbell had other interests than Cook, and second, "We're here."

That second text was sent after Everett, Coryell and Dellere decided to drive out to McEvoy's house north of Jennings, where Cook was staying, to end the fight once and for all. But when they got there, everyone was asleep.

The critical moment

The three men entered the home. There was a gun standing up in the front entryway. Every witness had different testimony about who picked up the gun first, who did or did not check if it was loaded and how it came to be in Coryell's hands.

Dakota Cook, Corey's brother, you, but you made your decision," to which woke from a recliner and talked to the men. she said, "Bull****. You know how much it They asked where Corey was, and he told them. They went down the hallway and opened the door.

No one could agree how the gun wound up in Coryell's hands. In a statement recorded by officers that morning, he thought someone tossed it to him. Everett Urban first said it "just appeared" in Corvell's hands, then that the two had argued over the gun. The prosecution claimed that Coryell picked it and loaded it himself.

And no one agreed on how or why Corey Cook got shot in the face while he slept next to his girlfriend, after two men that didn't like him found their way into the house. The house that Cook had invited them to five times that night in text messages.

Campbell said she walked Cook to their room around midnight, and they both fell asleep. She said that she didn't wake up when the gun went off, nor did she wake up when she was struck in the back by shotgun pellets.

When she woke up, she said, it was because Corey was making "gurgling sounds."

"I rolled him over because I thought he was snoring," she testified, "and then I thought he had a bloody nose, so I tried to shake him awake, but he wouldn't wake up."

The aftermath

When the shot rang out, everyone ran outside. Many people called 911, including Coryell. Coryell kept saying he didn't know what happened or if anyone got shot. Everyone described themselves as "hysterical."

Most said that Coryell has said he was going to kill himself, but was talked down. Everyone waited for the police and an ambulance to show up.
