next week to determine whether she contracted any infection.

"I'm sure he's not suffering financially that he can't afford instruments," Baylor said of Harrington.

Health officials opened their investigation after a patient with no known risk factors tested positive for both hepatitis C and HIV, the virus that causes AIDS. After determining the patient had a dental procedure about the likely time of exposure, investigators visited Harrington's office and found a number of unsafe practices, state epidemiologist Kristy Bradley said.

"I want to stress that this is not an outbreak. The investigation is still very much in its early stages," Bradley said.

Harrington voluntarily gave up his license, closed his offices in Tulsa and suburban Owasso, and is cooperating with investigators, said Kaitlin Snider, a spokeswoman for the Tulsa Health Department. He faces a hearing April 19, when his license could be permanently revoked.

"It's uncertain how long those practices have been in place," Snider said. "He's been practicing for 36 years."

The Centers for Disease Control and Prevention is consulting on the case, and agency spokeswoman Abigail Tumpey said such situations involving dental clinics are rare. Last year a Colorado oral surgeon was accused of reusing needles and syringes, prompting letters to 8,000 patients, Tumpey said. It wasn't clear whether anyone was actually infected.

"We've only had a handful of dental facilities where we've had notifications in the last decade," Tumpey said.

The Oklahoma Dentistry Board lodged a 17-count complaint against Harrington, saying he was a "menace to the public health by reasons of practicing dentistry in an unsafe or unsanitary manner." Among the claims was one detailing the use of rusty instruments in patients known to have infectious diseases.

"The CDC has determined that rusted instruments are porous and cannot be properly sterilized," the board said.

Health officials are sending letters to 7,000 known patients but cautioned that they don't know who visited his clinics before 2007. The letters urge the patients to be tested for hepatitis B, hepatitis C and HIV. Harrington could not be reached for comment Thursday.

A pause on the road

by three newcomers: Chad Applebury, Kristina Lemman and Ronda Faber, wife of Joshua.

Frahm said she thinks at least 20 kids have lived in her house, including foster children and exchanges students, and seven of them graduated from Colby High School while living there. One son, Karlyn, 16, is a junior today, and the other, Jon, graduated in 1999.

Of the 12 years he has been on the school board, Rogers said, he has been vice president most of the time. He works at Frontier Ag and has a daughter Madison, 17, who is a junior, and a son Garrett who graduated in 2010.

When he noticed there was an opening for the board, Applebury said, he decided run. He is the wastewater manager for the city, and has a son Eli, 9, in fourth grade and a daughter Karyssa, 6, in kindergarten.

When asked about her chances of winning, Lemman said she had no idea, but that she has been going to all the school board meetings and felt a big part of his decision to run, he said, came when former City Manager Carolyn Armstrong asked if he would be interested. He has had several campaign signs up, including a big one on a trailer by the old hospital on Range Ave. Mariman started working at the county Road and Bridge Department 21 years ago, and has been the county highway foreman for 10. Britton also worked at the road and bridge department, but retired last year. He was on the council from 1991 to 2001. Bolyard is branch manager for the Decatur Co-op Association in Lenora and also a volunteer firefighter. Five candidates filed for three open seats on the Colby School Board. Terms are expiring for three veteran members, including board President Janice Frahm, Vice President Tracy Rogers and Susan McLemore, but only Frahm and Rogers filed to run again. They were joined
