Old honey pots get new notice

Honey has a history going back to 2100 B.C. It is mentioned in some Babylonian writings. It was used for sweetening food, for medicine, for religious ceremonies and even as a form of money. In the 18th and 19th centuries, a special serving dish and usually a special serving fork or spoon were devoted to each type of food, so it's not surprising to find special antique honey pots. The wealthy used silver serving pieces, and honey pots might be shaped like bee skeps or have a sculpted or engraved bee as decoration.

Skeps were made of sold at a 2005 woven straw and were portable. If a skep was not destroyed to get honey out, another swarm of bees could inhabit a skep the next season. Old skeps sell today for about $50 to $100 as decorations. It is illegal to raise bees with a skep today. Beekeepers must be able to open hives today so mite medicine can be applied. Old and new honey pots can be found made of glass and pottery.

If you plan to use a sterling- or silver-plated pot, it must have a glass liner. Honey encourages silver tarnish, and tarnish destroys some of honey's nutrients.

Q: I have an original program from the Candlestick Park Dedication Dinner held April 11, 1960, at the Garden Court of the Sheraton-Palace Hotel in San Francisco. It's autographed by a few baseball players and by some of the people who spoke at the dedication, including Vice President Richard Nixon, Major League Baseball Commissioner Ford Frick, Giants owner Horace Stoneham and Giant's manager Bill Rigney. What is it worth?

Stadium for two seasons before Candlestick Park opened in 1960. The team played there for 40 years, until its new ballpark on San Francisco Bay (now called AT&T Park) opened in 2000. Your program would interest collectors of baseball memorabilia, but the Nixon signature means it also might appeal to people who want political [ ] [ ] collectibles. If you want to sell, contact an auction that specializes in sports collectibles. The program could sell for $100, but it might also bring $500 or more, depending on the program's condition and the fame of everyone who autographed it.

Not many hands offer the potential for a swing of more than 6,000 points. First, the proper conditions – a high-level vulnerable contract, doubled or redoubled – must be met. Then a critical guess, such as an opening lead, has to be involved.

Those were precisely the conditions in today's deal, which occurred in the 1988 national men's teams. The bidding started with South's twonotrump opening, whereupon North invoked the Gerber convention to ask for aces.

South responded to the four-club inquiry by bidding four spades to show two aces, and this is where the train went off the tracks. Recollecting that a spade response in the much more commonly used Blackwood convention shows three aces, North leaped to seven notrump. This was duly doubled by East, who was looking at the ace of hearts.

The trouble was that East was not on lead, so this left West with a critical guess. He was sure his partner had an ace, but he hadn't an inkling which one it was. West did the best he could, reasoning that North was likely to have a solid suit for his bidding. If East had the ace of that suit, it didn't matter what West led – East would have to get his ace before the suit could be run. West therefore dismissed the possibility of leading a spade or a diamond and focused his thoughts instead on hearts and clubs, where he knew from his own holdings that North could not have a solid suit. After much soul-searching, West finally opted for a club. As a result, declarer made the redoubled grand slam for a score of 2,980 points. Had East elected to lead a heart instead, the defense would have collected the first six heart tricks for plus 3,400.

The total swing amounted to 6,380 points – if not a record, then certainly not very far from one. (c)2013 King Features Syndicate Inc.
