uty clerk for the county, came to the meeting to earlier by the commissioners because the resolution requires county employees to use a vacation day and not a paid day if the county offices close. "I feel that is a little bit unjust because I feel that if we are ordered to stay home, I feel we should be paid," Schriner said.

She pointed out that lots of her co-workers feel the same way. She said she has two kids, and her husband works at the jail, making it hard to schedule time to be at home. Steele said he wanted to consider her request further.

· County Emergency Manager Autumn Arasmith let the commissioners know that the Red Cross wants a trailer back that the county has been using to store supplies, including 127 blankets and about 160 cots. Clerk Harms suggested that she could buy a trailer out of the election budget to hold the supplies, and Arasmith would only have to find another place for storage during election season, when the trailer would be used to hold voting supplies.

• The commissioners approved a bid from Groendyke trucking in Denver for a trailer to store asphalt oil. Clair Schrock, county road and bridge supervisor, said the trailer holds 6,500 gallons and will cost the county $7,500, and will replace a 10,000-gallon tank.

• The commissioners voted to reaffirm a resolution that the governor consider how KanCare, the state's revamp of Medicaid which took effect the start of this year, could affect people with disabilities. The commissioners originally approved the resolution March 19. They reaffirmed it after getting a letter that Jerry Michaud, president of to 18 county commissions in northwest Kansas. It to become a client. expressed concern about how people with intellectual and developmental disabilities would be affected if put under KanCare.

· Robert Schroeder, who lives in rural Thomas protest an inclement-weather resolution adopted County, filled the commissioners in on a section of County Road 28 in North Randall township. The commissioners inspected the road, which had a washout as deep as ten feet, during their April 15 meeting.

> "I was told it was in the five-year program 10 years, ago," he said. "None of you guys go on it, but it's a very busy road."

> Schroeder and the commissioners discussed posting a speed limit on the road. Steele said the county had planned on fixing the area under an earlier plan, which has since been abandoned.

> • The commissioners heard from Bruce Webb, the Cheyenne County appraiser, who is interested in working as the appraiser here, but did not make any hiring decision. The county has been relying on the state to do its appraisal work since the former appraiser, Mary Cech, died last summer.

> · Susan Guill reported that she heard at a meeting that the Kansas Department of Transportation will now require counties to put translators on their vans if enough people who can't speak English ride their buses.

> The commissioners approved a resolution requiring a $400 fee for scrap metal dealers to get a permit to operate in the county. The registration will be good for 10 years, and dealers will have to pay $50 to renew.

> • The commissioners approved an annual agreement with the Colby Community College rodeo team to lease corrals and barns at the fairgrounds for $3,000, with a $500 deposit.

• The commissioners heard a representative from Great Bend-based Freedom Claims Management explain the services her company offers Development Services of Northwest Kansas, sent working with insurance claims, but did not agree

"We'll put them on the list and we'll come pick 'em up," Schultz said.

Menlo City Clerk Sharon Munk said she did not get notice of the cleanup in time to schedule it yet. She said she got a message from Christy Rocca, county economic development director, too late to include the issue on the agenda for the City Council's April meeting

Munk said she talked to Rocca and said she would try to bring the issue up either at the May meeting today or the June meeting.

Gem Mayor Phyllis Ziegelmeier said she had not heard about the cleanup, and calls to
