Also, legislative researchers project that keeping the sales tax at 6.3 percent will raise almost $1.5 billion over the next five years - something critics call a massive tax increase. Schwab contends that no matter how hard Wagle and her allies push, the House is not going to pass the Senate's proposals or anything close to them.

"She's not looking for a tax negotiation," Schwab said. "She's looking for a tax capitulation, and that's not going to happen.'

But Wagle and Brownback note that without the additional Democrats aren't party to the private tax talks because sales tax revenues, the state cannot pursue additional income tax cuts and sustain its current budget past mid-2015, according to legislative researchers' projections. Thus, Wagle said, resolving tax issues requires time and sharing information while the private talks continue.

"At this point, we haven't made as much progress as I would have liked to have seen," Wagle said.
