Four members of the Brewster Bulldogs track team qualified for the state meet in Wichita today and Saturday during regionals last Friday at Fort Hays State University.

Dan Brown jumped 6-0 for second place in the high jump. In the two-mile run, Layton Werth qualified in third, followed by Ben Baird in fourth, with times of 10:35:59 and 10:36:06.

Werth ran the mile in 5:01:16 to take fourth place. Nathan Jorgensen threw the javelin for a personal best distance of 153'6" to take fourth.

So far today, Baird took 10th place in the two-mile and Werth took 11th.

Coaches are Shea Rothchild and Audrey Schnurr.

Colby track coach recognized

A longtime Colby High track coach has been recognized for her 40 years of work at the school.

Dee Hovda was surprised with a "Track Coach of the Decades" plaque Monday night at the annual awards dinner for the track team as they prepared for their state meet in Wichita today. Hovda will retire this year after 40 years as a track coach. Officials said she started the girls' track team in 1973, when they had to practice after the boys in order not to distract them.

da and presented her with the award.

Rasmussen said he went to Colby High School at the time the program was being started, girls' gram quite a later," boys Coach d o n m u s - said as introduced H o v - along with girls Coach Lesley Wagoner. Hovda said she had to bring a proposal to the school board to get a girls team approved.

"I played sports in high school, and I went to a small school not far from here," she said, "and we played sports, girls did, but there were no sports in Colby."

Hovda graduated from the old Menlo High School in 1961 and from Kansas State University in 1965 before coming here as a coach and teacher. She started the Colby High girls' volleyball team in 1972.

Battle for team's survival at Indy 500

INDIANAPOLIS (AP) - When Oriol Servia arrived at Indianapolis Motor Speedway and heard the slogan, he thought it was intended for him.

Indy 500 or bust.

For Servia and his team, Panther DRR, it's actually more fitting given that Sunday's race isn't just the biggest of the season for this team, it's an all-out battle for survival.

"My girlfriend has been (living) in Costa Rica the last five years and she's always said she wants me to come to Costa Rica when I get time for a vacation," Servia said Thursday.

If the team can't find more sponsorship money soon, the 28-year-old Spaniard could be starting a prolonged vacation next week because Dennis Reinbold's team plans to disband following Sunday's Indianapolis 500.

Reinbold, who owns several automobile dealerships in Indianapolis, has been competing in IndyCars since 2000 but has never finished better than eighth in the points - exactly the same spot Servia is this season after four races.

The timing couldn't be worse. Four days after Servia finished sixth at Long Beach, Reinbold had the woeful job of informing Servia and his crew that the Panther DRR would be closing its doors at the end of May unless they could find more money.

Since then, Servia has put together an impressive run.

At Brazil, he qualified 13th and finished fourth. Last weekend at Indy, he qualified 13th again, ahead of defending 500 champion Dario Franchitti, two other previous Indy winners (Scott Dixon and Buddy Lazier), 2012 pole-winner Ryan Briscoe, all four Chip Ganassi cars and points leader Takuma Sato. Dixon, Franchitti and Sato comprise the sixth row Sunday. Briscoe will start 23rd with Lazier 32nd.

Off the track, Servia is doing what he can, too.

On Wednesday, he took time out from signing autographed items that he joked could be sold on E-bay to make yet another pitch for sponsorship. So far, nobody has come forward and sponsorship money can be hard to find in this economy.

"We're working on a few things right now, but we don't have any magic bullets at the moment," Reinbold said.

Two years ago, Servia was working for Newman Haas Racing when the team decided to close its shop. Suddenly, Servia, who had finished a career-best fourth in the points, was out of a job.

Reinbold wasted little time in signing Servia to drive his car. Servia responded last year with four top-five finishes, including fourth place at Indy.

A fast start to 2013 put Servia right back in the points chase and things seemed to be improving for Reinbold's low-budget team. Then came the call that caught everyone off guard.

"This is the saddest part, and I'm really sad that a team like this has to stop after only a few races in the season," Servia said. "I hope somebody reads this somewhere about this situation and a company or a potential partner comes on board."

This isn't how Reinbold envisioned things going after running a full-time IndyCar team for most of the past 14 years.

But he has found ways to adapt. He shared the ownership with former IndyCar driver Robbie Buhl, helped Sarah Fisher become the first North American woman to win a pole in open-wheel racing, brought Paul Tracy back to the 500 and last year, when the team was struggling with Lotus engines, formed a technical partnership with Panther Racing, another low-budget, Indy-based team that is co-owned by John Barnes, Jim Herbage and others. Panther's team is not folding.
