Oberlin man sentenced to 17 years

rett said that behavior did not show Coryell instigated the incident.

- Coryell called 911 after shooting Cook, indicating remorse for what he had done.
- Although the state presented evidence of Coryell having a criminal history, none of the prior incidents involved a felony charge.
- Coryell had a blood-alcohol level of .8 five hours after the incident, indicating he was not in a frame of mind to make intelligent decisions.
- Witnesses testified Monday that Coryell performed charity and volunteer work while in jail, and that showed the kind of person he is.

Judge Pratt denied the request for a downward departure, knocking down many of the arguments.

He said he couldn't agree that Coryell did not instigate the situation, due to the fact that Coryell shot Cook when he was in a vulnerable state. That made him the aggressor, the judge said.

The judge said the fact that he was drunk could not be used as an excuse for Coryell's actions because his use of alcohol was voluntary. He said he could not acknowledge the charity work as a mitigating factor because the focus should be on punishment and rehabilitation.

Coryell made a statement apologizing to the Cook family before Judge Pratt issued his sentence.

During his address, Coryell said, "I'm not the person who would intentionally hurt anybody."

Patty Coryell, Coryell's mother, made a statement, saying her son had made a "one-time mistake" due to alcohol.

"Dylan shouldn't be going to prison alone," she said, referring to friends who were with Coryell the night of the murder.

In imposing sentence, Judge Pratt said he could not approve the request of the prosecution for Coryell to serve 20 years in prison.

He said that the sentence time for felony murder is a minimum of 20 years, but the jury had found Coryell guilty of a lesser crime, second-degree, nonpremeditated murder.

Judge Pratt sentenced him to 17 years for the second-degree murder and 13 months for aggravated assault, to be served concurrently, or at the same time.

Coryell was ordered to pay $836 dollars in court fees and fines. No fines or costs were accessed for aggravated battery.

Court officials said Coryell will be evaluated in the next 10 days by the Department of Corrections before being sent off to a state prison.

Superintendent to retire from Golden Plains

the needs of the students, was instrumental in implementing a multi-tiered system of support at the elementary and middle/high schools. Other initiatives during her tenure include a Character Education grant, expanding the migrant program, expanding the English as a Second Language and At-Risk programs, addressing issues in bullying prevention, online safety, character education and data collection, and the implementation of interactive boards, iPads, and other technology in the classrooms.

Welshon has always been an outspoken supporter of the students and staff.

"I feel like I have been the luckiest person in the world to have had the opportunity to work with the fantastic students, staff, board, families and communities of the Golden Plains School District," she said. "I can't say enough about how much they care and how hard the staff works for the students of the district. They make my job easier, and I want to thank them for all they do."

"That is what makes this job a joy - the people care and the kids get a wonderful education. "I want to thank all the members of the community for their support these past six years. I have always had the support of the board and I want to thank them as well for their service to Golden Plains.

"It has been a wonderful experience and I will miss everyone. I love kids, I love people, and I will always have a special place in my heart for Golden Plains. It is the 'crown jewel' of Northwest Kansas schools."

Mrs. Welshon said she plans to continue to live in Hoxie and provide services part-time at the Mickey-Leopold Funeral Home. She also plans to spend more time with her family, including husband Joe, children Ryan and Janessa Welshon of Rhinebeck, New York, and Kim and Matt Breining of Goodland, and her grandchildren.

"I am looking forward to being able to get out and enjoy the sunshine during the day," she added, "I will miss the students and the activities and will be following the kids in their academic and athletic pursuits."

Succeeding Welshon as superintendent will be Darrin Herl. "I wish Darrin the best of luck," she said. "He will be bringing a multitude of talent to a great district."

For young immigrants, delayed coming of age

By Christine Armario

Associated Press

MIAMI (AP) - As a child, Jorge Tume used to sit and do homework as his parents cleaned the desks and floors of a concrete company in Miami. When he was done, he'd take out the trash and help finish cleaning.

Tume's parents brought him to the U.S. from Peru with his younger brother when he was 12. They came on tourist visas and then stayed in the country illegally when their visas expired.

After he graduated from high school, Tume had few job prospects. So he did what his parents did: Cleaned offices, washed cars and picked up odd jobs.

Now, one year after President Barack Obama announced that young people brought to the country as children and living in the U.S. illegally would be allowed to stay and work if they met certain criteria, Tume's life looks decidedly different: He's behind a computer filing notices for liens at the concrete company he once helped his parents clean.

"I know every corner of this office, this building," said Tume, 21. "I used to see other people do the job that I'm doing now. And I'm sitting here now working."

Nearly 300,000 young adults previously living illegally in the United States have been granted permission to stay and work through the program, one of the most significant shifts in immigration policy in recent decades. Some 200,000 more have submitted applications. For those immigrants, the last year has been a sort of delayed coming of age: Learning how to drive, getting a license and landing a first job that's not off the books.

"Now I feel like I'm actually a member of the community like everyone else," said Frida Ulloa, a 24-year-old student at Florida International University, who came to the U.S. from Peru as a teenager to see her ill father and never went back.

The Deferred Action for Childhood Arrivals allows immigrants brought to the U.S. illegally as children to obtain work permits for two years, which then are eligible for renewal. To qualify, they must show that they came to America before their 16th birthday, and were 30 years old or younger when the policy was announced on June 15, 2012. They must also have lived in the U.S. continuously since 2007, and either be in school, have graduated from high school or served in the military. And they can't have a serious criminal record or pose a threat to public safety or national security.

With a work permit and Social Security number, they can drive in most states, open a bank account and in some states, pay in-state college tuition.

"The life that I live now is easier than it was before," said Tume, who used to take a 45-minute bus ride to get to work. Now he drives and arrives within 15 minutes.

The policy change came after years of advocacy by students and lawmakers in support of the so-called DREAM Act, which would have provided a path to citizenship for thousands of young immigrants in the country illegally. Efforts to pass it in Congress have repeatedly failed.

Lawmakers are currently debating a comprehensive immigration reform that would chart a 13-year road to citizenship for the estimated 11 million immigrants in the country illegally.

The program does not lead to residency or citizenship, but it also spares these immigrants from the threat of deportation. When Obama announced it last year, critics accused him of pandering to Latino voters a few months before the presidential election. "I think that deferred action gave us the opportunity to not be scared," Ulloa said.

After years of babysitting and other short-term, low paying jobs, Ulloa landed a full-time job with benefits related to her field of study: She's the Florida organizer for United We Dream, a youth immigrant advocacy organization.

"I think that's one of the biggest gifts of deferred action," she said.
