The Colby City Council tabled a discussion last week on naming the new park being built next to the Colby Aquatic Park.

At its meeting Tuesday night, the council turned down three names the Thomas County Coalition had suggested in favor of getting suggestions for "a better idea."

The coalition organized a naming contest several weeks ago, first taking suggestions from citizens. It then used the website SurveyMonkey city could ask the Colby/Thomas County Chamto narrow about 20 suggestions down to three: ber of Commerce and the city Recreation Depart-Grassroots Park, Prairie Park and Poolside Park. ment to help come up with a name.

Mayor Gary Adrian, who was not present at the meeting, suggested Oasis Park.

The council did not warm up to any of those ideas

"Couldn't we just sit on it for awhile and have it be a no-name park?" asked Councilman Pat Mallory.

"I think we can do whatever we want," City Manager Tyson McGreer replied. "We could sit on it, throw it back to them and say try again."

After hearing from McGreer how the names were chosen, the council decided it wanted to get suggestions from more people. McGreer said the City Attorney John Gatz said the study creates a dilemma and that the law seems to him like an attempt to make concealed weapons legal in most places across the state. To ban concealed weapons, a building would need metal detectors and armed guards.

"Can you imagine what the cost of that would be?" he asked.
