'Back to school' takes balance

Knowledge for Life

Returning students enrolled for school today and school starts in two short weeks.

Along with the school year comes an array of school and non-school activities. Claiming family time strengthens the family as a unit and adds value to family life in general. Below are some tips to help you claim your family time:

- Declare at least one night a week as "family night." Make it a pizza, movie or game night, or a time to cook together, do a project, go for a walk, ride bikes, etc. Relax and be flexible.

- Encourage your children to bring their friends home, stay for supper and join in on the family activity. This may make your child happier that he-she can have a friend over, plus it gives you the parent, a chance to get better acquainted with this friend your child thinks so highly of. Make sure your child and their friend understand that they are to participate in the family activity and not plan on other activities.

- Resist the temptation to sign them up for everything. Before assuming your child wants to participate in an after-school sport or activity, consider his or her age and interests. Include your child in decision making when choosing which activities to start or continue. Talk with your child about his or her interests. Just because you enjoyed playing the piano or playing sports – or wanted to and were never able to – don't assume your child wants to do that.

When looking at activities, don't forget 4-H.

It is for all kids age 7 by Jan. 1, 2013, to 18. We have a project to catch almost any interest and teach a lot of life skills. The new year starts Oct. 1, so August and September is the time to visit the clubs and see which one your child likes best. You are welcome to join at any time. Stop by our office for more information.

Also if you have a third, fourth or fifth grader, they can participate in Kids-a-Cookin'. This is a hands-on food preparation class that includes nutrition and sometimes economics and games. It is held after school, about 3:45 to 5 p.m., at the Community Building basement. Fall dates are Thursdays Sept. 12, Oct. 10 and Nov. 14. Call the Colby Recreation Department, 460-4440, to sign up.

In considering an after-school or extracurricular activity, consider the time commitment for both the child and others in the family. Will transportation be available? How many practices each week? When? What will be the cost? Will special equipment be necessary? How much traveling will be required and what will that cost?

- Designate a family calendar and post it where entries can be easily made and schedules checked. My family uses the school calendar and we highlight events that pertain to us. That keeps us from having to transfer all those events to another calendar and perhaps missing one.

Find a rule that works for you when there is more than one "fun" activity – one that does not require attendance on a day or a weekend. Our rule was, "First one on the calendar wins." This helps kids and parents want to get their items on the calendar. I was always quick to get the weekends I wanted to go back to my parents on the calendar so other items didn't bump it.

Remember to allow enough unscheduled time for the family to spend together and some down time for relaxation, great for both parents and kids. It can help keep stress and melt downs to a minimum. If an activity list needs to be sized down, help your child to make a list of positive and negative aspects of each prospective activity and look at which ones are the most important.

Be willing to say "this isn't working" and make changes. Try not to feel stressed and pressured. Your priority is balancing the demands of your family, school, work – plus keeping your own health and sanity.
