Thomas County and Oakley officers finish basic training

Mark Walker, a deputy at the Thomas County Sheriff's Office, was one of 47 new law enforcement officers to graduate from the Kansas Law Enforcement Training Center on Oct. 4.

The new officers were members of the 225th basic training class at the center southwest of Yoder, near Hutchinson. The center is a division of University of Kansas Continuing Education.

Alison Hargitt, a patrol officer at the Oakley Police Department, is another graduate in the group.

The graduates, who began their training June 24, represented 33 municipal, county and state law enforcement agencies from across Kansas.

Graduates receive certificates of course completion from the center and Kansas law enforcement certification from the Kansas Commission on Peace Officers' Standards and Training, the state's law enforcement licensing authority.

Established by the Kansas Legislature in 1968, the center trains the majority of municipal, county and state law enforcement officers in Kansas.

About 300 officers enroll annually in the 14-week basic training program. The center offered continuing education and specialized training to as many as 5,600 Kansas officers each year. The training center is financed by municipal and stat court docket fees.

Utah town forgets to hold elections for the second time

By Paul Foy

Associated Press

SALT LAKE CITY - A tiny Utah town had to skip an election earlier this month because part-time officials forgot to advertise or prepare for it - and it wasn't their first election flub.

Wallsburg, population 275 in the Wasatch Mountains 40 miles from Salt Lake City, failed to schedule an election two years ago, and city officials had to be appointed then.

They were supposed to go up for election Nov. 5, but once again, Wallsburg forgot to get things going, according to Wasatch County officials. The Salt Lake Tribune first reported on the missed election.

"They didn't advertise" to draw candidates out of the woodwork and "they just went on without doing anything," County Clerk Brent Titcomb said Wednesday. "Close to the election day, they called to ask what they should do."

The leaders of Wallsburg were told by state elections officials to keep serving until an election can be held in two years.

"We will remember them in 2015," Titcomb said. "They will definitely have an election in 2015."

Wallsburg's mayor and four city council members had no hidden agenda in letting the election slide; they just forgot, he said.

Wallsburg is so small it doesn't have a website or paid staff, and nobody answered the phone at the town's empty office on Wednesday - which is used only for official meetings.

Titcomb said the town's mayor is Jay Hortin, who didn't return phone messages left Wednesday by The Associated Press.

The mayor was described by his father as an electrician who may have been unavailable because he probably was out working somewhere.

Of his son extending his mayoral duties, Frank Horton said, "Somebody's got to do it."

Frank Hortin said he had no clue how town officials forgot to hold an election, adding, "We probably wouldn't have anybody around to get elected anyway."

The town empties out on weekdays because "there's no work around here," Frank Hortin said. "We have a couple of little shops, but people go out of town for work - I drove to Salt Lake for 20 years."

Wallsburg is a mile-high town in the Wasatch Mountains 4 miles from Deer Creek Reservoir. In winter, there's only one way to drive into the town - or out of it. It was incorporated in 1917, according to the Utah League of Cities and Towns.
